Beth-El Sisterhood Offers Latkes, Fun

A Chanukah celebration will be enjoyed by members of the Beth-El Zedeck Sisterhood at its Dec 13 meeting. A latke luncheon will be served at 11:30 a.m. and an afternoon of fun and games will follow.

A candle lighting ceremony has been planned by Mrs. Marlene Posner, program chairman, and it will be narrated by Mrs. Sidney Steiman. Lighting candles for the Chanukah Menorah will be Mesdames Kalman Greenspan, Benjamin B. Ashkenaz, Charles Echt, Marshall Weinstein, David Hollander, Arnold Chaplik, Arthur Sacks and Miss Martha Heyman.

Reservations for the luncheon must be made by Friday, Dec. 10 and may be called into Mrs. Nathan Cohen, 251-0726 or Mrs. Myron Schuchman, 844-2722. Price of the luncheon is $1.35 with reservations and $1.85 without reservations.

The opening prayer will be offered by Mrs. Howard Zukerman, and the closing prayer by Mrs. Eugene Lubin. Mrs. Fred I. Frisch is presiding officer.

Special Gifts Drive Top $550,000 Mark For JWF

Joseph Rothbard, the general campaign chairman, has announced that more than $550,000 was raised last week toward the 1972 Jewish Welfare Federation campaign at a Special Gifts function addressed by Rabbi Herbert Friedman, executive chairman of the United Jewish Appeal.

The contributions were pledged by 25 men and represented an increase of more than $100,000 from last year. They were, Rothbard said, a "clear-cut indication that our community will respond to the $2 million target we set for ourselves."

THE GENERAL campaign kickoff will be late in January. In the meantime, many pre-campaign meetings have already taken place, for both the general drive and the women's effort under Mrs. June Herman and Mrs. H. Robert Perk.

Children's Letters To Aid Russian Jews

As a means of demonstrating the affinity and identification of students at the Hebrew Academy with their counterparts in the Soviet Union, the following letters of concern to the Soviet Embassy and government officials were spontaneously written after a discussion in the primary open classroom last week. Children 6, 7 and 8 expressed their feelings in the following way:

Dear Sir,
I think it's very mean of you to make the people stay in Russia.

Beth Ann Cohen

Dear Sir,
Please would you let the Jews of Russia go in Freedom. Let the Jews go to Israel please. Soviet Jewry must go to a Jewish community. Would you please let them. I think it is cruel for Russians to be free and Jews not to be free.

Miriam Epstein

Dear Sir,
How would you like for Israel to take your people. I don't think it is funny. They don't like to work in Russia.

Steven Frankovitz

Dear Sir,
Are you treating the Jews nicely? I hope you are.

Shelly Frankovitz

Dear Sir,
Can I say about the Jews I think you should let the Jews go because you don't treat them rite.

You gavi them land and you are taking it away from them.

Seth Gurvitz

Dear Sir,
I think people should know what there supposed to be doing without you telling them. I think they have their own brains. What don't you let them use it. Let my Jews go.

Judith Hasten

Dear Sir,
Russia, please let my people go. They need there holidays they need there help and I'm warning you there going to get the help.

Jerry Israelov

Dear Sir,
Let my people go, Russia, to Israel.

David Kurlander

Dear Sir,
It is disgusting that the Jews can't go out of Russia. I wish that the Russian People could go to Israel I really would appreciate it.

Eileen Kurlander

Dear Sir,
I want you to let the Jews in Russia go free. I want the Jews to go to Israel. I want you to live in Israel and be free.

Renee Hasten

Dear Sir,
I think people should be nicer then they are right now. I think they should let you read out of a sidur.

Eve Ann Sacks

Dear Sir,
I hope Russia lets the Jews go. They need ther Holiday. What's the use of having a religion if youer not going to celebrate it.

Jeffrey Schankerman

Dear Sir,

Hadassah Szold Group Plans Latke Luncheon

New members of the Henrietta Szold Group of the Indianapolis Chapter of Hadassah will be honored at a "Latke Luncheon" when the group gets together for its regular monthly meeting on Wednesday, Dec. 15, at Beth El Temple. The luncheon is scheduled for noon.

Highlighting the program will be a dramatic monologue by Mrs. Francis Greenberg of Anderson, Ind. Though the monologue has no official title, it might be called "The Housewife's Lament" or "Now Take My Family — Please." Mrs. Greenberg, a graduate of Northwestern, is associated with the civic theater in Anderson.

She also teaches at the city's new fine-arts center, and has delivered her monologue in various places throughout the state.

In charge of hospitality for the luncheon are Mrs. Robert Trattner and Mrs. Louis Cohn. Mrs. Sam Kaplan and Mrs. Benjamin Jaffe are taking reservations. The opening prayer will be delivered by Mrs. Robert Goldberg and the closing prayer by Mrs. Norman Ochstein.

Mrs. Sherman L. Weinstein is president of the group. Mrs. Joseph Simkin is program vice president.

B'nai Torah Plans Talent Show At Chanukah Dinner

Flowers and gay holiday decorations will adorn the tables of the Chanukah Dinner on Sunday, Dec. 12 at 6:30 p.m. at B'nai Torah, 6510 Hoover Road, under the chairmanship of Mrs. Jack Zeckel. Cantor Edwin Epstein will light the Chanukah Menorah and Rabbi Ronald Gray will give greetings for this festive occasion. Sisterhood president, Mrs. Sheldon Friedman will welcome members and their guests.

The program will include an original skit written and directed by Rick Zeckel and Esther Bronicki with members of the N.Y.S.O. (Youth Group) participating. Children of the Religious School of the B'nai Torah will present a talent show co-ordinated and directed by Mrs. Morton Rolsky.

Mrs. James Gerstle and her committee will be in charge of this holiday "batamte" dinner. Mrs. Don Aimbinder will be in charge of the table settings and Mrs. Meyer Nahmias will be in charge of the Chanukah decorations. The price is $3.50 for adults and children under 12 will be $1.75. For reservations, please call the office at 253-5253; Mrs. Suess at 257-2100; or Mrs. N. Ettinger at 255-7147.

scheduled before mid-December and the intensive part of the campaign will take place the first 10 days of February, to be preceded by a mass workers' rally.

Report meetings will be planned for the latter part of February and final telephone solicitation is scheduled for late February and early March.

The Special Gifts event addressed by Friedman was held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Glick and was attended by some of the community's top leadership.

FRIEDMAN, who now lives in Israel, gave an up-to-the-minute report on developments in the Middle East. He said war threats by Egypt's Anwar Sadat must be taken at face value and that Israel must prepare accordingly. He said it would be tragic if Egypt were to renew the fighting to "sacrifice blood just to regain sand," but predicted Israel would emerge victoriously if war broke out again.

The UJA executive implored Indianapolis Jewry to raise its fund-raising goals because, he added, there was no limit to what could be achieved.

To lose our sense of integrity could only lead to our own downfall, he warned, because we are in partnership with Israel — a land that simply does not have the resources of American Jewry.

Once the Arab world realizes that Israel is no threat to their existence, Friedman said perhaps the task of improving life for all the peoples in the Middle East can be carried out.

How To Light Holiday Candles

Inasmuch as the ceremony of the kindling of the lights is the most significant phase of the Chanukah Festival, it should be observed in a spirit of reverence and solemnity. Seek to make it beautiful as well as impressive. The entire family should remain standing around the Chanukah Menorah.

The proper time to kindle the Chanukah lights is immediately before sitting down at the dinner table. The "Shamash" is lit, and while holding this lighted candle in your hand, before you kindle the candles in the menorah, recite the following blessings:

Boruch ata adonoi elohenu melech holom asher kid-shonu b'mits-vosov v'tsivonu l'hadlik ner shel Chanukah.

Praised art Thou, O Lord our God, ruler of the universe who hast sanctified us by Thy Commandments, and commanded us to kindle the Chanukah lights.

Boruch ata adonoi elohenu melech hoolom shehecheyonu v'kiy'monu v'higi-onu laz-man ha-ze.

Praised art Thou, O Lord our God, ruler of the Universe who didn't wondrous things for our fathers, in days of old, at this season.

On the first night only we also say the "shehecheyonu" v'kiy'monu v'higi-onu laz-man ha-ze.

Praised art Thou, O Lord our God, ruler of the Universe, who has granted us life, sustained us, and permitted us to celebrate this joyous festival.

After lighting the Chanukah candles, sing "Rock of Ages" and other joyous songs of the holiday, exchange gifts, play "dreidel" and, by all means, eat some "Latkes."

Teen Scene — by rickel and the YME staff

Well, guys, gals, and all others, here we are again. Oops! That should be, "Here I am again." Mr. Glueck is no longer with this here company; "this here company" being the Youth's Mightiest Efforts Wire-service. Soon, now, he should be appearing in his thing, an editorial comments unlimited section. However, never fear, I will still continue to pursue the direction to which the Teen Scene has been directed, that being Mass Character Assassination! I will, starting very shortly, have some help from Marc Herman, Alan Nemes, and Debbie Ryons.

To continue our present changes, we will start The Teen Of The Week section dedicated to that-those teen(s) who have come up with the big play in recent Indianapolis Jewish Youth History. To start it off right, I'm appointing Earl Smallbach this week's Teen Of The Week. Earl is chairman of the newly-formed TEEN LOUNGE group at the Jewish Center of Hoover Road fame and a student of North Central High School. He is receiving this award because of all the teens in the city he's the only one I haven't heard any dirty rumors about this week. Congrats, Earl, on being able to keep all your meanderings a secret!!!

BBYO (now where have I heard that before) held its Leadership Training Seminar last Saturday at the B'nai Torah Congregation. Harold Rhodes, Donna Schuchman, Gigi Chalfin, Karen Benmour, Don Fogle, Marcus Farraccini (whose identity will be revealed later in this very same column), and Little Z are the seven seniors who planned it and carried it out. Marleen Silvers and Eric Ossip, visiting from college, helped out during the day and Sam Goldstein showed up that night.

Baruch Ha-Shem NCSY will be helping out with B'nai Torah's Hanukkah Dinner this year. Having been asked to prepare a skit, Esther Broniki and Little Z got together and put together "DATING INSTRUCTIONS: A YOUTH'S VIEW-POINT." Should the highly humorous and dramatically oriented musical get approval from the powers that be, then it could become such a hit that there'll be no stopping it! It may even hit LUNCHTIME THEATER with Cowboy Bob.

Two girls from Lafayette BBYO came in for the BBYO LTS (see third paragraph). Bobbi Mazur (see Friday, August 13 P-O, page 15) stayed with Lucy Friedland and Becky Cooche stayed with Mona Frankovitz. Both stayed at Julie Schwab's for the after-Seminar Slumber Party (despite popular demand, no guys were allowed).

Hope everybody went to the Style Show put on at North Central sometime back. If you did, you probably saw Mike Passo. He didn't model, he just escorted.

And speaking of that very same weekend, Hello Dolly broke close to zero records even though it had Jay Bursky, Sara Kreiger, Arni Diamond, and Neil Rolsky connected with it some way or form. Too bad, guys, you can't win 'em all.

And here it is, THE EXPOSE OF THE WEEK! This week featuring MARCUS FARRACCINI, that master of mirth and mystifying mischief! When Marcus Farraccini was born, under a different name, of course, he was determined to become a big shot, and he did (kind of). He became president of the Federation of Jewish Youth Organizations and AZA Regional Aleph S'gan Shaynee for KIO as a youth. He served on the JWF, JC, and JCRC boards as a youth. He served as a member of the North Central Student Council as a youth. About the only thing he didn't serve as a youth was at a Bar Mitzvah; but he's still got time. In reality, Marcus Farraccini, under the pseudonym of the Blond Bombshell and Fuzzy, is still a youth and always will be a youth until he gets older and is an adult. Marcus Farraccini is, drum roll please, GLUECK!!! (gosh, I'm out of breath, and outa space; so tune in now sports fans for YME's gossip of the week) — by rickel.

Trip To Israel Gives Moments To Remember

By CAROLE AND JERRY STEIN

This was our first trip to Israel, but most assuredly not our last. You have read a most reiterated complete record of our activities, previously reported here by Bertha Lichtenstein, and we would not anticipate your eagerness to hear such

Instead, may we offer some of our "moments to remember" and our reactions to the arousal of one's dormant emotions.

Israel... like witnessing the birth of a baby — to see the growth and green sprouting everywhere from an Arab desert. Our guide commented when questioned by one of our bus-mates "What is that new building?" Her reply, "I don't know, it wasn't there yesterday."

Jerusalem... you feel she is once again going through her adolescence, where growth is by leaps and bounds every day. The awe of Old Jerusalem where one can see the relationships of all religions, and you ponder, "if everyone could see this, wouldn't we have a cool and peaceful world to live in."

Golan Heights... Only when standing at these vantage points and seeing the vulnerability of the Kibbutzim below, does one realize that the Heights can never be in hands other than Israeli hands.

Massada... A monument to 970 Jews and a testimonial to the greatness of man who could have built this fortress.

Haifa... Bustling, industrious, exciting and beautiful. A moment of awe — "The Way of the Righteous Gentiles" leading to the Monument to the 6 million Jews. A quote from Golda Meir's speech at the Knesset. "Yes, we have prejudice and intolerance — these are not born here. People bring these with them and we strive to eradicate it."

Frivolities... A corned beef sandwich at Pfefferberg's in Jerusalem... Falafel from the sidewalk shops... Halavah cut from a large block in the market place in Old Jerusalem... The music of Israel in a nightclub in Old Jaffa. The beautiful sounds of Jerusalem of Gold, the unofficial anthem of Israel.

Walking at night in Tel Aviv without fear where on Dizengoff Street, every Saturday night is like Times Square on New Year's Eve. Everywhere an art gallery and a book shop.

Sabra — the very delicious fruit indigenous to Israel — prickly and tough on the outside and soft and sweet on the inside — hence, the name given an Israeli — a SABRA.

Sounds Of Jerusalem

By JULIUS BRILLER

A new immigrant in Israel expects to feel some strangeness in his new home, though sometimes his surroundings seem even more exotic than he had anticipated. As an immigrant from America, recently wed to a sabra girl, I have had quite a bit of help settling in. Yet even after two years, the sights and sounds of Israel have the peculiar vividness of new experience.

We live in Ramot Eshkol, one of the handsomest of public housing projects anywhere. Our home is attractive and comfortable. Yet precisely there, in North-East Jerusalem, I realized most keenly how far I had wandered from New York City.

For one thing there is the stillness. No sirens or screams in the night. No air of suppressed violence. Not much sign of families in crisis. Domestic serenity is the general mood, though undoubtedly the strains of adjustment must affect many new immigrant families, who constitute a large percentage of Ramot Eshkol's tenants.

THERE IS A SLIGHT bustle every morning beginning around 6 a.m., when many Israelis prepare to go to work. Many offices, especially the government ministries of Jerusalem, open at 7:30. The afternoon rush hour, measured by somewhat more crowded buses, begins around 2 p.m., after which families gather at home to eat. In many cases during the summer this is the close of the working day, though not for retailers or for most self-employed men. Moreover, a good number of Israelis begin a second, part-time job in the afternoon, in order to support those middle-class amenities that have come to be considered necessities in such neighborhoods as Ramot Eshkol.

For those whose working day ends in the afternoon, and for others with some time between their jobs, there is the Mediterranean custom of the siesta — or, as some Israelis call it, the schlafstunde. This afternoon nap, however, is not honored so scrupulously and universally as in Italy. Despite the hot sun, children tend to congregate and play in the neighborhood, and many adults are up and about. The silence then is not as absolute as in older and less hard-working societies. That is the only time when one might feel that outside noises are obtrusive.

OF COURSE, most residents of this project, erected since the Six Day War in former No-Man's-Land, have had to endure the sound of building construction. Though by now the worst has passed roads and buildings are largely finished. Earth has been moved, and the first gardens and newly planted trees are in. The soft hiss of water sprinklers, and the crack when they revolve and change direction remind one of all the irrigation projects in Israel, including those in the early Yishuv which the Arabs dubbed "Jewish rain."

Less often than heavy construction, these days one hears the staccato chiselling sound of Arab masons shaping stone facings by hand. By an old municipal ordinance, all buildings in the capital must be finished in stone. After the Jerusalem stone is quarried and cut into segments, Arab stone masons carefully shape them, fitting each to the other, and forming the convex surface that adds much interest to the facades at Ramot Eshkol. The workmen fashion the stones with infinite patience while squatting on the ground, their heads protected from the sun by the traditional Arab keffiyeh. There are also innumerable stone retaining walls and stairs, part of the same indigenous aesthetic multi-colored Jerusalem stones, solidly, yet lightly establishing a connection between the work of man and the surrounding rugged Jerusalem hills.

BEFORE THE SIX Day War, Israel's link between Jerusalem and the enclave of Mount Scopus in Jordanian held territory passed through Sheikh Jairah. Today Ramot Eshkol is on the new road to Mount Scopus. The U.N. authorized military convoy has now been replaced by the regularly scheduled No. 9 bus, reinstated after twenty years. And very quickly indeed this former no-man's-land has been integrated into the heart of reunited Jerusalem. The traffic of construction workers and watchmen from Arabs districts is very brisk, and recently Arab peasant women have begun to lead their donkeys through the project. Clad in long embroidered gowns, the village women hawk their wares — in this season shouting, anavim! (grapes).

A mainstay of the older Jerusalem neighborhoods has also begun to appear below the windows of Ramot Eshkol, the Old Clothes Man with his cry, alte sachen! (Former residents of Jewish districts of New York who were growing up in the thirties and forties experience a pang of nostalgia observing this classic small entrepreneur re-enter their lives so many years later in Ramot Eshkol.) At night, even in summer, the wind whistles across the hills and through the wadi separating Ramot Eshkol from Shuafat and Ramalah, neighboring Arab towns which are in short hiking

Cote Saint Luc, Canada's Unique Jewish Suburb

LOS ANGELES — Readers of the Los Angeles Times got a glimpse through that paper of what is probably the most unique Jewish city in the world, Cote Saint Luc, Quebec where: — The student body of the three Protestant schools is 95 per cent Jewish.

— All but 8 per cent of school taxes collected from Jewish residents go to support of Catholic schools. — The mayor is Jewish as well as five of the six aldermen.

WHAT BRINGS about this odd mixture of taxes, schools and city administration is the unique history of this 100-year-old suburb of Quebec which claims the highest percentage of Jewish population of any city outside Israel.

The article is by the paper's staff writer, Charles Hilinger.

"You can say we're a wonderful, crazy, mixed-up place," declares Samuel Moskovitch, 66, mayor of the Jewish city named after a Catholic saint.

"Our schools are kosher-Protestant. Our taxes, kosher-Catholic."

MOSKOVITCH, mayor since 1963, says as far as he knows Cote Saint Luc boasts the highest percentage of Jewish population of any city outside Israel.

More than 80 per cent of the 25,000 people who live here are Jewish.

Jewish children of Cote Saint Luc go to Protestant schools because in the province of Quebec there are two public school systems, Catholic schools and Protestant schools.

"Everyone who is Catholic," explains Moskovitch, "goes to Catholic schools. All others go to Protestant schools."

AS FOR TAXES, under Quebec law, if an individual owns real estate and is Catholic, his property taxes go to the support of Catholic schools.

If an individual is Protestant, his taxes go to support the Protestant schools.

But if an individual is Jewish, 92 per cent of his taxes go the support of Catholic schools and 8 per cent to the support of Protestant schools, even though Jewish children attend Protestant schools.

"To understand the reason for that," says Ken Hill, information officer of the Montreal Protestant School Board,

"you must know 100 years of Quebec history."

EVERY DAY, classes at the Jewish-Protestant schools in Cote Saint Luc begin with the Lord's Prayer.

This fall, however, for the first time, the provincial government has finally permitted daily Jewish religious classes at the Cote Saint Luc schools instead of traditional Protestant studies.

Quebec has been under the domination of the Catholic Church throughout its history.

In every courtroom hangs a cross of the crucified Christ.

EIGHTY PER CENT of the six million inhabitants of the province are French-speaking Catholics.

And the remainder, the 20 per

Sounds Of

ONE OF THE most exotic sounds for the Westerner is the call to prayer of the muezzin in Shuafat and from another nearby minaret in East Jerusalem. Given the early morning hours which prevail in Israel, not many residents of Ramot Eshkol are night people, whatever their previous habits. Still, for those who write or reflect at 2:30 a.m. or thereabouts, the haunting call to the Islamic faithful enters one's own apartment. The muezzin is no longer a caftan-clad man on a minaret. Today he is an amplified recording, though the chanting still comes from these towers which stand alongside mosques throughout the Middle East.

Night sounds also include jackals moving through the wadi and yelping hysterically in the vicinity of human habitations. Packs of dogs, some from Ramot Eshkol, others characteristic sandy-colored Arab strays add their voices to the cacophonous medley. But the strangest sound of all remained a mystery to me for almost a year.

EVERY NIGHT I had heard deep, soul-wrenching sighing, like the lament of some tortured prisoner. Occasionally, it assumed a feral quality, a deep resonant grunting, sounding demented and sad. I tended at times to attribute it to some neighbor, but I feared to think of the terrible burden which disturbed his sleep. Other times, I dismissed this explanation, and suspended all judgement. Till one night my wife, also awake, mildly asked, "Do you hear the lion?" — "Yeah, sure I hear the lion," I ruefully answered. Then suddenly — "My God, a lion. Of course, that's what it is!"

The lion in question, sad fellow, is confined in the Biblical Zoo, almost two kilometers from my home. But Ramot Eshkol and the Jerusalem hills, aided by wind currents, have their own curious acoustical qualities. What I had suspected was in a sense true, the lion is a neighbor, and one of the exotic sounds of my Jerusalem nights.

Cote Saint Luc, Canada's

(Continued from Preceding Pg.) largest French-speaking city on earth — next to Paris. It occupies one-third of the St. Lawrence River island.

The island, 35 miles long and 11 miles wide, consists of the city and 29 suburbs. Cote Saint Luc is one of the suburbs.

The total population of the island is 2.2 million. The Jewish population is 110,000, with those outside Cote Saint Luc living in Montreal, Hampstead, Montreal and Westmont.

The language of Cote Saint Luc is English.

"WE SPEAK English because it is the language of our children," explains Rabbi Sidney Shoham of Beth Zion Congregation, one of three synagogues in Cote Saint Luc.

"Our children go to Protestant schools. There is no such thing as a choice of language."

The separatists in Quebec, both the violent type such as the revolutionary Quebec Liberation Front (FLQ) now outlawed by the War Measures Act, and those who hope to achieve an independent French-speaking nation of Quebec such as the Parti Quebecois, want unilingualism throughout the province.

SO FAR THE Jewish city of Cote Saint Luc has managed to escape violence, or even peaceful demonstration.

"I think it is because there is no language conflict within the city," explains Earl Kimmel, city clerk in the Jewish city.

In St. Leonard, 55 per cent of the residents speak French. Here only 5 per cent speak French.

But the people of Cote Saint Luc say they are apprehensive about the future, about the possibility of an obligation to speak French.

"YOU KNOW there have been 250 bombings on the island over this language thing in recent years," said a Jewish leader of the community, who asked not to be quoted by name.

"Businesses are not expanding in Montreal. Outsiders are reluctant to move here. They move to other areas of Canada instead."

"Many have moved out of the province, out of Cote Saint Luc, in the last three years because of the threat. It is very difficult for one to sell his home here."

"IF QUEBEC should become independent I think you would find most of the Jews moving from here as well as most of the English-speaking residents of Quebec."

The name Cote Saint Luc goes back to the 17th century. Cote in French means slope or shore. The city is built on a slope that leads to the St. Lawrence River.

All signs in the city are in English. There are kosher meat markets and delicatessens.

Most of the residents are middle to upper middle-class, mostly businessmen in the Montreal area.

STREETS HERE CARRY names like Yehuda Halevi — a famous Jewish poet — Weizmann Road, Schweitzer Road, Einstein Ave. and Shalom Ave.

Five of the six aldermen are Jewish. The only non-Jew on the city council is 75-year-old Irish-Catholic Ed Kirwan, who has been on the city council for 38 years. He was first elected when most of the residents of Cote Saint Luc were Irish. Only 1,000 people lived here as recently as 1951.

Other members of the council are Henry Marcovitz, William Kesler, Bernard Lang, Nathan Shuster and Irving Singerman.

The Jews of Cote Saint Luc are immigrants, first and second-generation families originally from Russia, Germany, Poland, Romania, and Hungary, and a recent wave from Morocco, Egypt, Algeria and Syria.

Jews In China Recalled As Nixon Readies Visit

CINCINNATI — Centering Marcus, head of the American attention on China in recent Jewish Archives here, to see days led Rabbi Jacob R. what connection there might be between the American Jewish Community and the Communist Republic in his files.

He came up with the name of Solomon Simson, who in the 1790's attempted to reach the Chinese Jews of Kai Feng Fu, who at that time was still an active Jewish community, but who since have disappeared completely except for a few Jewish relics.

In the 1790's, a distinguished American Jewish businessman, Solomon Simson, attempted to reach the Chinese Jews at Kai Feng Fu in order to carry on a correspondence with them. The Simsons were a remarkable early American Jewish family, the first member of which, Nathan Simson, came to these shores around the year 1700. After he made a fortune, he went back to London to live in style.

HAVING NO SONS of his own, Nathan brought his nephew Joseph to America. Joseph began life modestly as a beadle, or shammash, in the New York synagogue, but he ended up as its president. This sounds like a typical Horatio Alger success story — from rags to riches. Actually, the chances are that Joseph got ahead because of the success of his two wonderful sons: Sampson Simson, the older, was one of the first members of the New York City Chamber of Commerce and a daring privateer speculator during the French and Indian War; the other son, Solomon, was equally brilliant and successful.

The Simson family was very patriotic. During the Revolution they went into exile to Connecticut rather than live under the British in New York. When Joseph packed up and moved, he was already ninety years of age.

DURING THE WAR, Solomon Simson was in the lead mining business; lead was important for the making of bullets. He was also an important public utility industrialist, in the lighting business, manufacturing candles made of whale oil. In politics he was a Jeffersonian Democrat and he became one of the heads of the local Democratic Society, a very liberal organization. His political opponents, Federalists and old-line Tories, attempted to smear him by calling him Shylock. He was an active Mason. Despite his many activities, he found time to serve the local Jewish congregation as president, and was elected and re-elected for five terms.

In the late 1780's he carried on a correspondence with a Jewish merchant in India and in the same decade began to engage in the China trade. In 1785, the first American ship to make the trip to China returned after a successful voyage. Four years later the enterprising Simson sent his vessel, the "Sampson," to Canton.

THE SHIP WAS named in memory of his brother who had died before the Revolution. The "Sampson" took the eastern route around the Cape of Good Hope and the Indian Ocean. Sometime before 1795 Solomon read in a book in China that there was a substantial Jewish colony there. What he probably did not know was that those Jews had been in China for centuries, ever since the Middle Ages, and through intermarriage were typically Chinese in appearance.

In 1795, with the aid of a German Jew who wrote Hebrew, the international Jewish language, Simson sent a Hebrew letter to China by the hand of Captain Howell, the master who had previously sailed the "Sampson" into Canton Harbor in 1789.

THE AMERICAN JEWISH Archives has a copy of the Simson letter. In this letter he asked his fellow-Jews a number of questions for he wanted to know all about them. How long have you been in China? How many are you? What type of Judaism do you practice? From what tribe do you stem? (He thought certainly that they were one of the Lost Ten Tribes.) What sort of Hebrew books do you possess? Do the Chinese treat you well? What's your line of business? Here in America we have it good, some of us are elected to important political offices.

Unfortunately Captain Howell could find no Jews and reported the failure of his mission. Had Solomon Simson in his day had access to the resources of the Hebrew Union College Library in Cincinnati, he would have found the answers to some of his questions. The Library possesses the largest collection of Chinese Hebrew manuscripts in the United States.

On the surface, Israel appears to be a very civilized and relatively advanced country.

And in many areas of activity

it is. The United States government, for instance, doesn't regard us as a

"development country" at all, but as a "developing" one —

a subtle difference with significant implications when loans and financial assistance

plans are mooted. We do resemble the average "affluent" country with our modern supermarkets, shining

gas stations, large department stores with wall-to-wall carpeting and piped-in music, attractive offices and well-laid out luxuriously - gardened su-

AND, OF COURSE, the

tourist wandering in the luxurious lobbies of the Hilton or the Sheraton can forget what country he's in until he looks at his itinerary schedule.

Yes, there's a resemblance to the Western way of life.

However, it's when you start coping with the minutiae of daily life that you discover the differences, the different behavior patterns which bring about confusion, disorganization and varying forms of shock —

in other words, culture shock.

Take a little thing like a 6-day week. One day off, Saturday, may be taking the Biblical injunction literally — "Six days shalt thou labor and do all thy work" but it's a shock to the system. When Sunday becomes

Monday and Monday becomes

Tuesday, you can be out of kilter

the whole month, losing track of the day and your senses.

WHEN FIRST confronted with what appears to be a archaic anachronism — and where is the all-powerful Histadrut, the labor union to end all unions, in a case like this — the average newcomer is simply stunned. If you start work on Sunday, then you should have Friday off. His reasoning is wrong. You work

Sunday and Friday although

Friday is supposed to be a "short" day — from 8 to 1 or

2 instead of the usual 8 to 4 pattern. However, with traffic making departure from any of the large cities in Israel on a

Friday afternoon a task to try

Job, many people are learning the wisdom of staying in their offices until 2 or 3 and then wending their way home. Better to sit in a cool office than swelter in hot traffic and Friday becomes practically a full working day.

The feelings of surprise and bewilderment at a strange and backward phenomenon such as the 6-day week are often followed by stronger feelings of hostility. The whole thing begins to seem — not just strange —

but also bad, unpleasant, unhealthy or just plain idiotic.

With the passage of time, as the unknown becomes familiar,

as the newcomer begins to fathom the reasons behind the work week, attitudes and feelings change. He becomes less disturbed and more accepting: he begins to realize that, in a country still fighting for its existence, a 5-day week may still be a luxury it can't afford.

SLOWLY, THE NEWCOMER

becomes accustomed to the ways of Israel, a country which is an odd mixture of the East and the West which still — for instance — looks with favor upon the afternoon nap. At first, the newcomer is incredulous.

Brandeis Supplies Profs For Judaic Departments

WALTHAM, Mass. — Brandeis University, building up to a citadel of Jewish learning, is providing scholars for the spread of Judaic studies courses to many colleges and universities throughout the nation. Where once only a handful of institutions offered courses in Jewish civilization, today an increasing number have made Jewish studies a part of their curricula. DURING THE PAST year alone, 11 Ph.D. graduates from the Philip W. Lown Graduate Center for Contemporary Jewish Studies, the Institute for East European Jewish Studies, and the Philip W. Lown Institute for Advanced Judaic Studies.

The Department and the Center offer bachelor's and master's degrees, as well as the Ph.D. degree, while the Institutes offer research opportunities geared to post-doctoral fellows. The Institute for East European Jewish Studies was founded as a center to conduct research related to the legal and cultural conditions of the three million Jews living in East Europe. The Lown Institute for Advanced Judaic Studies has published a series of scholarly volumes and offers an annual series of public lectures. Four volumes of these lectures have been published by Harvard University Press under the title "Brandeis Texts & Studies."

"THE NEED FOR more teachers of Judaica is increasing rapidly," according to Dr. Nahum Sarna, chairman of the Near Eastern Department. "There has been a phenomenal increase in the number of students wishing to learn Hebrew, and a very large increase in enrollment in all of our classes."

The Lown School offers the Judaica student and curious students from other fields the opportunity to study in 57 courses, taught by 15 professors, lecturers and instructors. There are offerings in Bible, ancient languages, modern Semitic languages, Judaic literature, history, Jewish thought and philosophy, American Jewish community and Jewish education.

"But beyond mere course offerings," Dr. Sarna said, "we offer students — especially non-Jewish clergy (of which there are a significant number at the Lown School) — two added dimensions they don't get in the seminaries: we offer them our background in rabbinic studies, and secondly, we offer modern Hebrew, in which most significant contemporary research in Judaic Studies is published. It is not difficult to understand why so many American non-Jews — and Jews — want to study here. But it is interesting that we receive many applications from Israeli students, too."

Six Day Week

The afternoon nap habit strikes him as odd. "Grown-up women taking naps in the afternoon? Busy lawyers and doctors lying down in the middle of the day?" He identifies naps with babies and invalids and thinks we're slackers or loafers. Yet, gradually as the fabric of life here unfolds he discovers that — when you get up between 6 and 6:30, when schools and offices open at 8, when social evenings start late (after 9) and end after midnight — you have to sneak a nap in here or there occasionally — or collapse. In the end, many newcomers find the snoozing in the afternoon a cultural pattern worth adopting.

It's true that in the changing society of Israel where more and more offices and stores are split-shift of an 8 to 1, 4 to 7 day, to a straight 8-4 day, the nap between 2 and 4 is becoming a myth, but a myth to which lip service is still being paid. When my telephone rings at 3, I know it's usually a tourist. Israelis know that it's not customary to call or disturb a household between 2 and 4. Oddly enough, even if no one in the house is sleeping, they'll be annoyed at the call.

YOU NEED TO KNOW the mores of the land, not only just for mental peace of mind but also in order to perform the simplest tasks of daily life. For instance, if you send flowers to a Mrs. Baruch Levy on the birth of her new son, the odds are good that they'll circulate throughout the entire hospital shifting from the traditional since the hospital clerk will be looking for Baruch Levy and he certainly isn't in the maternity ward. In Israel married women never use their husband's first names. True equality of the sexes. If you'd addressed the card to Mrs. Edna Levy she'd have received the flowers immediately.

Mina, One Of Israel's 5000 Prostitutes

JERUSALEM — Mina, now 17-year-old, and the daughter of a North African Jewish family of eleven children, ran away from her crowded, impoverished, tumble-down home in Bet Shean a year ago.

Now she is one of the 5,000 prostitutes which constitute a growing problem for the Jewish State.

The Jewish Chronicle, of London, in a survey entitled "Sex For Sale" by Geoffrey D. Paul, its former foreign editor who now covers the Israel beat, reported that no one knows exactly how many prostitutes there are in Israel, but the best guess is the 5,000 mark.

AFTER MINA slept outdoors in Tel Aviv her first night away from home, a young man lounging outside the Zion Cinema invited her into a nearby cafe for ice cream. He is now her "friend."

She shares his flat, cooks his meals, looks after his clothes and leaves him a sandwich and a beer when she goes off to "work" in the early evening. Work involves an hour or two at a time spent in any one of a number of sleazy hotels not far from Zion Square, or even inside the walls of the Old City.

Her customers are, to her, anonymous figures who flit through her nights leaving no impression — soldiers, tourists, Arabs. It's all the same. Yet, however, she looks at it, and with her limited intelligence she tries hard, her life now is incomparably better than it was at home in Bet Shean.

SHE HAS MONEY for clothes, there is plenty of food in the flat and her "friend" does not force her to work when she does not want to. Next month, they plan to have a fortnight's holiday in Elath.

So far, Mina has managed to steer clear of the police. She is still a juvenile and would probably be bound over and placed in the care of a probation officer if brought into court.

One day, she says, her attractive dark eyes widening, her "friend," a barman at an hotel, will marry her and then she will give up "the game."

MINA KNOWS other street girls. Their stories, as she recounts them, are very similar to her own, except that, to use her own word, she is "lucky" because she has her "friend" to herself. There are others who share one man.

Police and social workers are concerned about the growing problem of prostitution, and doctors about the increasing menace of venereal disease. But with their hard-pressed financial and man-power resources and the more troublesome — to society, that is — forms of delinquency, they have to admit that they have not been able to tackle the problem in the systematic way they would like.

A woman member of the Knesset, Mrs. Arbeli-Almoslino, has suggested the legalization and control of prostitution, which might or might not reduce the number of juveniles in the trade. But the chances of Israel ever agreeing to licensed brothels is remote indeed.

MINA MAY marry her man and give up "the game," but there will always be another Mina to take her place.

A reporter from a well-known London newspaper of quality just could not understand how a prostitute made a living in Israel, "when there are so many willing to give it away free." He had just returned from a weekend in Tel Aviv and was recounting some of his more eyebrow-raising experiences in that city.

It is an accepted tenet of Tel Aviv night life that lonely men and lonely girls find each other in such Tel Aviv night spots as Mandy's (owned by "the" Mandy Rice-Davis, with a branch in Jerusalem), the King's Club or at the Puerto Rico on Dizengoff, and that no money changes hands.

SOLICITING IN ISRAEL is illegal, and so is procuring. But this does not inhibit the middlemen — hotel porters, taxi drivers, and the like — from introducing clients to the girls on their lists.

One American journalist recently found himself faced with a demand for $100 each from two young ladies he had met in the foyer of a well-known Tel Aviv hotel and subsequently entertained in his room.

The police were called by the management to settle a violent argument — and the girls eventually departed with $30 a head, a sum considered not unreasonable by the policeman!

But the hotel hustlers and their sister call-girls, who seem widely known by their first names to everyone in the hotels, from the chamber-maid to the assistant manager, are the cream of the business.

IN THE AREA between Tel Aviv's Ben-Yehuda Street and the sea-front, and in Jerusalem around Zion Square, one comes across the cheaper end of the trade, a mixture of derelicts and, horrifyingly, girls who are little more than children. Mina is one of these children. Now nearly all of 17 years old, she has been on the streets of the capital for just on a year. She ran away from her home, in Bet Shean, in March of last year, one of the 600 girls whose disappearance from home in various parts of Israel was reported to the police in 1970. The seventh in the family of eleven children, Mina was the and, horrifyingly, girls who are

Jerusalem's Fix: Antiquity's Claim

JERUSALEM — The growing of eight-story apartment buildings rising in monotonous regularity atop the ancient stone hills of the former Jordanian northeast section of the

The blossoming white blocks

Holy City have drawn widespread international comment. This has focused on a political level, around the Israeli dynamism which the Arabs say is changing the character of the ancient center of three great faiths, and the Israelis say is revitalizing a reunited Jerusalem which has been almost dormant since its division in 1948.

DESPITE THE FURORE about new construction, 7,500 apartment starts since the Six-Day War four years ago are not beginning to meet the needs of Israelis, new immigrants and foreigners anxious to establish residence in Jerusalem. There is a screaming sellers market in housing, and every contractor in Israel is trying to obtain an apartment-zoned building plot whether in the west or east section of the city. Land prices may range up to $300,000 per one quarter of an acre and scarcity in this hilltop center is heightened by the tight policy of the quasi-public Israeli Lands Authority.

Obtaining labor, mostly Arab from East Jerusalem, is the next problem: design and planning the last consideration. Selling prices are steadily rising in a still expanding Jerusalem, blooming after decades of backward existence as the dominant cultural, religious, educational, governmental and always sentimental center for an ever-growing Israel.

MANY JEWS complain that housing is not being built fast enough, that despite a much greater demand for residence in Jerusalem only 17,000 persons have been added to the Jewish population, now 210,000 and that the new housing is too much alike and no sufficiently in the character of Jerusalem.

The aesthetic challenge of creating mass housing today within the tradition of this unique hilltop city, with its quiet lanes and shaded squares, seems to pose an extremely complicated problem. It is one which is troubling the city administration of Mayor Teddy Kollek, Arab leaders, Jewish architects, Israeli intellectuals and all who love Jerusalem, including some of the world's foremost architects, town planners and thinkers who, at the request of Mayor Kollek, have reviewed the city's master plan.

ALL INVOLVED have comments and criticism on the crucial problem of maintaining the physical character of this "special" city within the context of a fast-moving dynamic Israel and the truly pressing demand for new housing for tens of thousands of immigrants, slum dwellers, new couples long without housing opportunities, by new industry and expanding institutions in the capital. This, it is still hoped, can be accomplished without blatantly offending the cultural sensibilities of the 70,000 Arab residents living in the city which holds their affection.

One contribution has been launched, which may serve as an example for creating a new Jerusalem, in the form of a modern building which combined the timeless sturdy construction of the ancient city with the comforts demanded by sophisticated international buyers of second homes today.

CALLED THE ARIEL, a 50-apartment structure will rise on an impressively scenic hilltop overlooking Mount Zion and the Temple Mount in the heart of Jerusalem, designed for condominium purchase by foreign residents. It is intended to offer luxurious living in an overseas apartment for those people who want a home in Jerusalem for now and-or the future, while adhering to aesthetic guidelines which will make the structure a fitting gift to the city's panorama by its builders and apartment owners.

The Ariel will also be the first project in Jerusalem to be based on the apartment-hotel (Continued on Next Page)

St. Peter's Hospital's Most Beloved Volunteer

By STAN LEVINE

ALBANY, N.Y. — Little Abe Moroze is a big-hearted man!

His role as a good samaritan literally the command to "love thy neighbor" with no flamboyant fanfare. In so doing, he has made thousands of persons happy over the past decade.

Not a "hypocritical do-gooder," this Albanian practices literally the command to "love thy neighbor" with no flamboyant fanfare. In so doing, he has made thousands of persons happy over the past decade.

ABRAHAM MOROZE is a Jew. His "hobby" is visiting patients of all faiths in Albany's St. Peter's Hospital, a Catholic institution.

By profession he's a real estate salesman. His avocation is visiting the sick, particularly those forgotten by so-called friends and relatives.

Abe is a daily fixture at the hospital. He normally walks from his home every morning "to chat with my neighbors in need of a good listener."

On his visits — rain, sun or snow — he journeys through the corridors of all six floors. At each door, Abe stops and asks, "Hi, how's it going today?"

NEW AND OUT-OF-TOWN patients receive his particular attention. If they look lonesome, he enters the room and "talks for a spell."

Asked why he devoted a minute of 90 minutes a day to visiting the hospital, Abe mused is visiting the sick, particularly and replied, "I guess it's because I like people. Lying in bed is tough and I know from experience."

During World War II, Abe was confined to a bed in Spadra General Hospital, Los Angeles, Calif., for three months with a serious kidney infection. Eventually, his right kidney was removed by surgery.

BEING FAR from home and lonely, Abe then decided that if he got well he'd make it his mission to visit patients at St. Peter's Hospital, near his home.

Abe not only kept that promise but also expanded his good (Continued on Next Page)

principal by which owners share in hotel income accruing to their apartments when they do not occupy them. Apartments are being offered at $39,000 to $46,000 for two room units fully-furnished with maid service and hotel facilities, including all appliances, dishes and kitchen utensils, with the possibilities of an annual return of up to 17 per cent of investment. The apartments may be obtained with payments of from $23,000-$27,000 or 60 per cent of purchase price — quite unusual in Israel — with the balance in a self liquidating mortgage which is retired out of hotel income.

THE BUILDING ITSELF, it is said, will be a far cry from the current apartment construction complaints. It is designed as a singular massive stone and concrete structure to blend with the surrounding hillsides, rising in two separate sections; two - storey hotel reception area and six-storey apartment wing.

According to its Mexican architect Pascual Broid, now an Israeli resident, the Ariel is planned firstly to match perfectly with its setting in the Judean Hills. It will be close in spirit to the scattered Arab stone houses clinging to the rocky landscape as if growing out of the soil as do the olive trees. But, at the same time, it is intended to demonstrate to all those building the city that a structure can be designed specifically for Jerusalem which offers modern living without raising costs or damaging the aesthetic environment.

BROID CRITICIZES the controversial mass housing program for immigrant absorption in Jerusalem as a "sprawling pile of blocks." He attributes the disappointing quality of residential design in Israel to lack of sufficient government funds for distinctive architecture and the poor quality of the inexpensive architecture chosen by private builders who can dispose of almost anything, irregardless of design in the current seller's market.

This, he notes, is in contrast to the high standards of public buildings such as museums, schools, libraries, etc. In the Ariel, he and apartments as well as the General Administration building of the 1968 Olympics. He is also responsible for airline offices in the United States. He recently became a new immigrant in Jerusalem.

All-Time Record
U. Enrollment

About 55,000 students — an all-time record — have commenced their studies in Israel's institutions of higher learning in the new academic year that began in mid-October, about 6,000 students more than the previous year.

About 15,000 students have had to be turned away for lack of room in the country's universities. Many among these are applicants from countries abroad who have wanted to begin or continue their studies in Israel. There has been a marked increase in the number of students wishing to proceed to a Master's degree or to a Doctorate.

THE HEBREW UNIVERSITY in Jerusalem, which is Israel's oldest university, but second oldest institution of higher learning, has the largest number of students in the country — 18,000 as compared with 16,000 in the past academic year. The main increase is in the number of students proceeding to higher degrees. These account for about 4,000 out of the total number of students at the University.

This year the Hebrew University is offering new facilities to its students. It has opened a School for Applied Science and Technology; courses in social anthropology in the Department of Sociology; and courses leading to a Master's degree in the School for Social Sciences.

TEL AVIV UNIVERSITY, the second largest academic institution in the country, will have 14,000 students as compared with 12,500 last year. There were 8,500 applications for admission to first-year studies, but more than half the number have been rejected for lack of room and facilities.

Tel Aviv University has this year introduced the semester system to take the place of the trimester system, so as to facilitate studies for new immigrant students and students demobilized from the Israel Defense Army. For the first time in its history Tel Aviv University will have more men than women students (55 per cent as compared with 45 per cent). The most popular courses at Tel Aviv University this year are those in psychology and the medical sciences. In Jerusalem, on the other hand, there has been a marked increase in the MOROZE ALSO goes to Albany's Veteran's Hospital and Albany Medical Center Hospital periodically. On occasion, Abe visits the elderly in Villa Mary Immaculate nursing home because "they enjoy having a middle-aged man (he's 58) drop in for a talk session."

Abe checks in at 5 feet 4 inches and 128 pounds.

To date, he figures he's made 4,380 visits to hospitals.

Am Yisrael, Hi!

By FRED LEWIS

I have been living in Israel almost two years, and while this doesn't make me any sort of authority on anything, it has afforded me the opportunity to go in beyond my depth, and render a personal account of life in this land of milk, honey and falaffel. Before I go further, let me say that Israel is a great place to live in, although I wouldn't want to visit there (without a hotel reservation.) To start with the language, Ivrit as they call it in Hebrew, it is strictly for 1) the natives, 2) the children who learn it the easy way on their mother's lap, and 3) people who like to study real hard and are able to learn real quick. Not being any of these — sorry, and mortified to admit it, just not for me. I attended an Ulpan for five months, and learned just enough Hebrew so that when I speak it, Israelis ask me in English what I am trying to say. That's the trouble. I just don't get a chance to use Hebrew. All adults use Yiddish, German, French, Rumanian, Russian, Hungarian, and English. So why should I struggle?

THAT ISRAEL is a land of contrasts has been said many times before. There is the ocean, the lakes, the deserts, the fish ponds, the hills, the woodies (or is it the wadis?), and the skyscrapers — all squeezed into an area the size of New Jersey. Drive along a modern highway — a kvetch in Hebrew (or is it kveesh?) crowded with traffic, and you can see a young Arab number of students in science.

THE TECHNION — The Haifa Institute of Technology — the country's oldest institution of higher learning, has registered 8,300 students — 800 students more than the previous year. Of these, only 900 are new students selected through stiff entrance examinations from over 3,000 candidates.

The Technion has opened two new faculties this year: a Faculty of Biology and a Faculty of Medicine, which is to merge with the Abba Hushi School of Medicine, established in Haifa some years ago. The courses in Electrical Engineering have this year attracted the largest number of students — more than 1,000, showing an increase of 250 over last year. The Technion has only 800 women students — the greater majority taking courses in architecture or chemistry.

BAR ILAN, Israel's religious university at Ramat Gan, will have 5,200 students this year. It has admitted 1,700 new students but has had to reject some 3,000 applications, including many from students abroad, for lack of facilities.

Bar Ilan has this year expanded its research facilities by opening an Institute for Research in Oriental Jewry and another for Research on the Diaspora. The University has also opened a school for translators and interpreters, and is doing preparatory work on the planning of a Faculty for Medical Sciences. A total of 600 students at Bar Ilan are reading for their second and third degrees.

DYNAMIC development has taken place also in the more recently established academic institutions in the country. Haifa University now has 5,000 students — 1,000 more than last year, while Beersheva University has 3,300 students, more than 600 over the number registered last year.

The Bezalel Academy of Arts in Jerusalem admitted 350 students this year. Of these, 100 are new students. Over 400 applications have been turned down for lack of space at the institution. Work has begun on the construction of its new Academy building adjoining the Israel Museum.

Am Yisrael, Hi!

shepherding a large flock of grazing sheep in a field along the road, just like in King David's time, except that he is holding a transistor to his ear instead of a harp under his chin.

On the other side of this same artery, pulsating with auto-sclerosis, are fields of growing wheat, rye or cornflakes. In the midst of the huge mass of motor vehicles on the road, you can see a bedraggled driver in a wagon that was old when Moses was still hiding in the bulrushes. Side by side with modern apartment houses can be found crumbling sheds, not one too tumble-down to have tenants. (You can't blame the people who live in them; I'm sure they'd stay at the bridal suite of the Hilton if they could).

TRULY A UNIQUE land, I have yet to meet a visitor who has not fallen under its spell. Its beauty is to be appreciated in its vistas of orchards, forests, flowers, animals, and gorgeous looking children of all ages and appealing babies (who are seen everywhere, both before and after birth).

Now let us turn to the present state of design in the State of Israel, the shape of things that come apart! The faucets in the bathroom and kitchen sink suspended about two feet too high so that you have to attach ugly rubber nozzles to them to keep from getting soaked by splashing water; the pushbutton lights in stairways that go out before you reach the landing, leaving you in pitch darkness; the drain pipes over the porches that drip water on passers-by; the short lengths of rubber hose for electrical connections that make tripping easy; the trees planted in the middle of the sidewalk — to mention only a few items.

FROM DESIGN we come to the workmen who manhandle it — builders, installers, servicemen, all of whom suffer from what Ephraim Kishon calls "the third screw syndrome" (instead of the three screws for which there are holes, the plumber will put in two, or maybe just one). When workmen come, it is we who have to supply the ladder. Otherwise they would put a chair on the living room table to reach the ceiling. Or, if he has a partner, one stands on the other's shoulders. Its not unusual for plumbers to leave packing sticking out of joints of pipes, like whiskers. This being Israel, the worker or delivery man will sit down for a cup of coffee before, during or after the job.

Should you happen to be a do-it-your-selver, Israel is a paradise for you. If you need a board for a shelf, a bolt, assorted plastic panels, just walk to the nearest vacant lot. Need glass for a bookcase, or metal to line a flower-box? Ten minutes' scrounging behind City Hall. My wife needed a small table for the telephone in the kitchen. She was on her way to the store to buy one and passed an empty lot. There, waiting to be picked up, was a telephone table!

SHOPS ARE everywhere, including the ground floor of apartment buildings. Bread comes mostly unwrapped and is carried home nude through the streets, a la France. Fish is often wrapped in old newspapers, rendering them unfit to read. Most stores close at lunchtime until about four, so that the shopkeepers will be good and rested when it is time to drink tea at five.

Israeli soldiers carry their small arms (rifles, carbines, sub-machine guns) with them wherever they go, unloaded of course (it is to be hoped), and NO EXPOSE would be complete without some com-

Catholic Nun Avers She Left Her Heart In Promised Land

Sister Mary Alfred Noble, formerly president and now professor of psychology at Fontbonne College in St. Louis, delivered the Dr. Isidor Shogam Memorial Lecture from the pulpit of Temple Beth El.

It is a privilege to be with you this evening and I am grateful for the opportunity to talk with you about Israel. For many of you it will be carrying coals to Newcastle — but this time the coals will be carried by a Roman Catholic nun, who having visited Israel, will never be quite the same — a Roman Catholic nun who has left part of her heart in the land we all call "holy."

What can I tell you of Israel? You who know so much more than I — you who understand the pain and anguish and suffering that created the state of Israel — understand deeply and all too well because perhaps you

Am Yisrael, Hi!

(Continued from Preceding Pg.) ments on the people responsible for the current auto, bus, truck and traffic scene in Israel, set by some of the world's worst drivers. When these people get behind the wheel of a car they turn into demons — driving too fast, tail-gaiting, passing every other car, zooming around corners, starting from traffic lights like entrants in a race.

Their antics are compounded by the pedestrians who can be almost equally idiotic — they walk without facing traffic, don't look when crossing, stroll down the middle of roads. Bus drivers drive like maniacs — they travel at top speed on short runs, the bus jerks and throws you off your feet, they jam on their brakes, go around corners at dangerous speed, miss people by inches, smoke while driving, turn on their radios so loud they blast your ears.

Still on the subject of motor vehicles, I actually saw, with my own eyes, the following scene: A small truck was stalled by the side of a country road, its engine overheated; the driver had the cap off and was filling the radiator with soda water from a seltzer bottle! Another day I saw a bus driver with his two-year-old baby seated on his lap as he drove his bus. Lastly, during the drive to the airport from Jerusalem, the taxi driver had his small son seated next to him, teaching the mechanics of driving!

AND YET . . . the people of Israel! As individuals, and when they stop shoving and asking personal questions about how much you earn and what rent you are paying — they are kind and helpful. In the bus they will tell you the fares, where to get off, translate your questions to the driver.

We have had store managers drive us home when there was no other means of transport. One supermarket manager got his wife to drive us home one rainy night when there were no taxis. When we unexpectedly decided to remain for the night at our new lodgings and were unprepared, one neighbor came with blankets, another with an electric stove and heater.

To sum it up, there's something very lovable about all these people, with their warmth and keen sense of humor. What do these diverse human beings share in common? It's their kindness and humanity. It sticks out all over. Not everyone you met in Israel is a living doll, but there are enough "wonderful" people to make it a great place to live.

(Continued from Preceding Pg.) have yourselves experienced the anguish and the suffering. What possible excuse can I give you for daring to talk of Israel? The only excuse I can offer you and the only reason for my being here this evening, is that I too love Israel, and because I love Israel, I want to talk about her — even if I can only speak of what you already know — and know much better than I.

FIRST OF ALL I would like to tell you how Fontbonne College became interested in Israel. How does anything start? It all started with people — people who understood, who could talk together, who wanted to do something to increase understanding and knowledge of Israel. And so from the plans and hopes and mutual trust of a very small group of six Jewish and Christian friends, there emerged a seminar on Israel — eventually a second seminar, lectures, two exhibits of Israeli art, a growing collection of Judaica in our library, a Chautauqua lectureship. We at Fontbonne had been inspired by your faith and trust in Israel, and we too wanted in some way to help and share in the building and the preservation of the state of Israel.

Through these experiences that Fontbonne made possible and through institutes and study programs, including two in Israel itself, I learned the greatness of Israel and felt a growing need on my part to do all that I could for Israel and her people. I learned so much — that Israel is a living proof that man's dreams and hopes and aspirations can be realized. I learned of the great achievements surrounding the rebirth of the state of Israel. I learned that in a land where the history of ages past is all about one, the present and the future loom large and shine bright. I learned that Israel is a land whose people's unfading consciousness of its history and its spiritual heritage is a live link binding together all of time.

AND NOW I KNOW that through the rebirth of Israel no Jew need ever again suffer persecution, exile, discrimination because he is a Jew. The redemption of the Jews advances the freedom of all peoples and fulfills the will of God in that redemption.

Your dedicated work, your grasp of the depth and authenticity of the bond between a people and a land, not only helped to bring about the modern miracle that is Israel but has advanced our greatest need today — the cause of freedom and the understanding of one person for another so that eventually this understanding will issue in a true brotherhood of man under the Fatherhood of God. Without your dedicated help, this would never have been possible. You have given mankind a great legacy!

For more reasons than can be recounted here, Christians bear a heavy responsibility for forcing Jews to seek a permanent homeland of their own: or better, to return to it. But our moral failures have been turned by the Israelis into their glory. Despite the presence of soldiers everywhere, most with guns slung over their shoulders, and despite the continuing and increasing threats from the Arab nations, Israel is a glorious free from war and arms — for country — and albeit, a peaceful one.

IT IS GLORIOUS because of what has been accomplished: an almost desert terrain turned green by millions of trees, the creation of cities and towns and farms where there was once nothing at all, the forming of a nation from a vast variety of immigrants from very different backgrounds.

And this is a peaceful nation — not in the sense of being no nation today is more threatened — but peaceful in the more important sense of inner purpose and tranquility. To speak with an Israeli is to speak with a proud man — a man proud in the right way of all the right things and values. Christians must understand what Israel means to the Jewish people and accept the fact that the relation between Jew and Israel is unique; that this relation is unique; that this relation

(Continued from Preceding Pg.) tionship has a history of thousands of years and goes back beyond the British Mandate, the Turkish rule, the Mameluke rule, the Crusader, the Moslem, the Byzantine, the Roman, the Hellenistic, the Persian ages — even to the Biblical period itself. Israel can be understood only in the light of the history of the Jewish people — persecuted, driven, killed, exiled — but always there was Israel — a refuge, if only it could be reached; a land — sanctified by its prophets and its religious traditions; a home — its origins lost in the mists of history — but home.

TRUE, THERE WERE times when Judaism survived without a state and there will always be a people of Israel and a land of Israel; but today a political structure, a state, is necessary both to save the land and the people. God spoke through Samuel (do you remember?) and I think God spoke through the United Nations when in 1947 the State of Israel came into being through a United Nations declaration. The prophecy of Amos come true!

And I will restore the fortune of my people Israel, So that they shall rebuild the ruined cities, And dwell in them and plant vineyards, And drink their wine, And make gardens, and eat their fruit; And I will plant them upon their own soil, And they shall never again be rooted up From off their soil which I have given them.

As you see, I love Israel — its history, its beauty, its potentialities — even its heat and desert wastes.

AND BECAUSE I love Israel and her people, I need to say this: that today it is practically impossible to discuss any aspect of Jewish thought without reference to Israel and its myriad contemporary problems — and one ever-present, very "sticky" problem: the threat of genocide in June of 1967 and the absence of Christian voices raised in protest or Christian hands held out to help. Two and one-half million Israelis did win a miraculous victory over eighty million enemies in the Six-Day War of 1967. The Israelis won miraculous victories in 1956 and in 1948 but the miracle may not occur again; and as someone has said, the Arab armies can afford to lose many wars to Israel — they need win only one of them! We, you and I, Jew and Christian, must need remember this.

In the Washington Daily News of May 28, 1968, Eric Hoffer concluded a series of reflections on Israel this way:

I have a premonition that will not leave me; as it goes with Israel so will it go with all of us. Should Israel perish, the holocaust will be upon us. Israel must live!

AND WHAT DOES Israel mean to a Roman Catholic nun? How can I tell you? The work going on, the incredible programs in education and welfare, the building, the cultural developments in all areas of the fine arts, the successful integration of thousands of immigrants. The birth of the state is a miracle. The development that is taking place today continues the miracle.

I have been privileged to travel the length and breadth of the country — not just from Dan to Beersheba — but really from Metulla to Eilat and from sea to sea. I have lived in comfortable hotels and in the guest house of a kibbutz. I have visited telds and excavations — even picked up bits of pottery in a live "dig" — spent time at Hatzor where Dr. Yigal

Yadin explained his return to the site whose original excavations he had directed; visited Megiddo, the Nabatean excavations at Avdat in the south; the excavations of Caesarea close to the only 18-hole golf course in Israel — and climbed the long, hard, hot way to the heights of Massada, a citadel of courage and dedication — and walked and walked and walked in a land that is one vast tel hiding thousands of years of history — but no history more important than the "now" — nothing more important than what is necessary to be done today in this land that is once again beginning to flow with milk and honey.

I ALSO SAW border patrols: soldiers, trucks, planes — all the ominous symbols of those defenses that today are necessary for Israel's survival. And the people: friendly, easy to talk with, anxious to share their pride in their country. People, aware of the military, of the defenses, the constant threat from all sides, and yet seemingly not living in fear. They are confident of the future, building for tomorrow. They are filled with hope and vision and a tremendous faith in the future of their land. The Israelis are very hard workers and quite literally the Negev is blooming. Some of the best peaches I have ever eaten were grown near the kibbutz where Mr. Ben Gurion lives — peaches from an orchard whose trees are bearing large luscious fruit — and that just a few feet distant from barren sandy ground in the vast Wilderness of Zin. The swamps have been drained, the rocky stretches have been planted, the reforestation programs are filling the hills and valleys with trees.

The sandy, rocky land is once more covered with verdure and one can understand the biblical allusions to the beauty of the land. And all those things have been accomplished by people who have believed in this Israel . . . not alone by Sabras . . . and their fathers' fathers . . . and their fathers' fathers . . . and by you . . . but this miracle has been wrought. The work done at Ashdot, a completely new town, is exciting. The ruins of the old Philistine Ashdot are some miles south of the new town and are in sharp contrast. The new town is only about twelve years old but it has a population of over 20,000 with some 35 factories — and I think it was there that I saw a Revlon factory. One must be impressed by the industry, the dedication, the faith and determination of the people.

THE DEVELOPMENT in the fine arts is phenomenal. I saw fine painting all through the country. All the kibbutzim were decorated with good art pieces, usually the productions of the kibbutzniks themselves. I saw a beautiful exhibit of Eskimo sculpture in Kibbutz Hazorea — on a very, very hot day. The exhibit was on loan from New York. The Jerusalem museum is filled with priceless treasures. The Billy Rose Sculpture Garden is a once-in-a-lifetime experience: Rodins, Degas, Epstein, a Mestrovic (the famous Moses); the Shrine of the Book, the building designed and built just to house the Dead Sea Scrolls, especially the complete

Isaiah; the breathtakingly beautiful Chagall windows in the synagogue of the Hadassah Medical Center in Jerusalem; the Chagall mosaics laid in the floor of the main foyer in the Knesset (and who would dare walk on them?); the Chagall tapestries woven at Gobelin and now too in the Knesset; the great red

Castel mural on a lower level; the David Palumbo doors at Yad Vashem and the Knesset — great magnificent symbolic iron monuments, overwhelming in their intensity and their meaning; the galleries and shops; the artist colonies at Safed, Ein Hod, Jaffa. All this (Continued On Page 35)

Is Golda Meir's Mission A Success?

NEW YORK — The question of the success of Golda Meir's mission to Washington was anybody's guess, as the main reason for the Prime Minister's appearance in America — to see President Nixon — was replaced by a round of TV appearances, talks with editorial committees of leading publications, and addresses before the UJA and the Israel Bond organization.

Mrs. Meir's charm should not be written off, which could mean that she may have stemmed the tide in Washington which clearly was an even-handed approach to Israel's position in the Middle East. But it was clear that her principal goal — sale of additional Phantom jets — was a stand-off, no different today than before she came to the United States.

SPEAKING AT A news conference after her sessions with the President and Secretary of State William P. Rogers, Mrs. Meir conceded that there still were some differences between the position of Israel and the U.S. on Middle East problems. "Some of the misunderstandings have been cleared," she told reporters.

Mrs. Meir substantially told the same story to what was hoped to be an outstanding session with the President and other leaders of national Jewish organizations. Held Monday night, the meeting with the President's Conference of Major American Jewish Organizations was told by Mrs. Meir that some differences between the two nations were cleared up, and she hoped that others would be resolved soon. She did reveal that Rogers told her that Israel would not be expected to remove any of her soldiers anywhere until a peace agreement had been reached.

One of the observers at the meeting told the P-O that Mrs. Meir seemed optimistic, but noted that she always appeared that way.

The commitment from the United States which was made public was hardly new — that the U.S. would participate in modernizing Israel's armaments.

The possibility of some development because of Mrs. Meir's visit to the U.S. at a time when the United Nations was discussing the demand of Egypt that sanctions be enforced against Israel for refusing to withdraw from Arab occupied territory was a subject of considerable discussion. There were even reports in the press that President Sadat had agreed to hold "proximity" peace talks with Israel in a New York hotel. This improbable development was published at the same time that Sadat blamed the U.S. for misleading him on at least two occasions in recent months on what Israel would do to permit opening of the Suez and in return for withdrawal of all Russian forces from Egypt.

BESIDES APPEARING on CBS and NBC television, Mrs. Meir was tendered a luncheon by the President of ABC to which leading editors and commentators of all the media were invited. She also met with the editorial boards of the "New York Times," "Time" and "Newsweek" magazines.

At a press conference under the tightest security ever experienced by Washington press corps, Mrs. Meir was asked by Lilian Levy of The POST and OPINION: "Madame Prime Minister, have you special reasons to anticipate hostile action by Egypt in the near future? And if so, is there reason to believe that Jordan, Syria, and perhaps the Soviet Union, persons from the Soviet Union, would join actively in that action?"

Mrs. Meir replied at some length. She said: "It may happen. In Israel we listen to what Sadat says. We know of the arms that are coming into Egypt and, as I said before, thousands of Russian personnel. And we think we ought to consider his threats seriously."

"THIS DOES NOT mean that we are convinced that fighting will begin. But it would be more than foolish on our part if we said, 'Well, come, we discount that immediately. These are just idle words.'

"Because we have known in the past that Arab leaders even when they know that they have no chance to win — and I believe that President Sadat knows that even if he speaks of his preparedness to sacrifice a million Egyptian lives, three million Egyptian lives he says — this still does not bring victory. This brings death. . .

"Sometimes when Arab leaders have spoken like that in the past they eventually become slaves to their own statements . . . and may begin to snoot. We, at any rate, must be prepared for an eventuality of this kind."

"Whether Jordan and Syria will join or not, of course, I don't know. That depends also upon them."

"UPON THE SOVIET Union joining more in the war than they are already involved, I don't know. I would hate to think that the Soviet Union would feel itself free to join the Arab war against us and be applauded by the rest of the world."

Mrs. Meir was asked if she thought there might be some agreement with respect to the Middle East when President Nixon meets with the leaders of the Soviet Union next year. She said it was "inconceivable" that the President of the United States would come to any agreement on a solution "that affects the security and maybe the very existence of the State of Israel. . . without our knowing anything about it, without our participation . . . it's inconceivable to me."

She added that after her long conferences with President Nixon, "I went away with a feeling that there is definitely an understanding of the problems generally in our area, of the Israeli way of looking at it. And I guess that's the most one can ask of a friendly government."

SHE MADE CLEAR, however, that with or without the Phantom jets Israel stands firm. She said, "Israel will not, cannot, be scared, bullied into a position which it will not accept because it believes that it is not good for its security."

Mrs. Meir met with many of the congressional leaders during her visit to Washington and had a special meeting with Senator Symington, who heads the subcommittee on Middle Eastern affairs. Those meetings gave the senators, both Republican and Democrat, an opportunity to underscore their support for Israel.

It appeared clear to most observers that Mrs. Meir found more sympathy and community of understanding in her talks with President Nixon than she found with the State Department.

REFORM THEOLOGIAN JOINS FRAY

Teeth In Conservative Practices Debated

NEW YORK — The question of teeth in rules of Conservative practices stirred delegates at the recent biennial of the United Synagogue and also found a top Reform theologian joining those who see the need for stricter standards.

Two leading Conservative rabbis slugged it out at the recent convention. They were Rabbi Benjamin Kreitman, who headed the Conservative Law Committee which resigned en masse last year to bring the crisis to a head, and Rabbi Arthur Hertzberg, of Englewood, N.J. who has risen to a leading position in the Movement.

RABBI KREITMAN believes it is necessary to put teeth into Conservative halachah. He was opposed by Rabbi Hertzberg who pleaded for time before Conservative practices be made mandatory.

The next act in the ongoing discussion over the Conservative Law Committee is expected to take place in March at the convention of the Rabbinical

Assembly of America. The report of Rabbi Robert Gordis' committee, which was appointed to study the situation, will be adopted or rejected at that time.

The Reform theologian was Rabbi Eugene Borowitz, who is on the faculty of the Hebrew Union College — Jewish Institute of Religion, and visiting professor at the Jewish Theological Seminary of America. He is editor of "Sh'mah," new bi-weekly magazine, and he stated his views in that publication.

DR. BOROWITZ, in a lengthy evaluation of the Conservative Movement prompted by the recent changes at the Seminary but probing deeper to the heart of the Conservative Movement's plight, aligns himself with those that seek to map the stricter, distinctive and strong blueprint as advanced by Dr. Robert Gordis for a reconstituted Law Committee.

A rejection of the Gordis plans and/or a dissolution of the Law Committee, Dr. Borowitz views pessimistically as transforming conservatism to merely "the right wing of Reform Judaism."

"With the law gone, it seems to me we see the end of the whole mythic structure of Conservative Judaism as a philosophy rather than as an organization, as a content rather than a coalition. All the chief symbols — the chancellor, the seminary, the faculty, the law —," he insists, "have lost their unique meaning. They no longer speak with special power. They denote only that which is quite common to other American Jews, the desire to stay Jewish in an identifiable way but to do so in a modern, post-ghetto form."

AT THE UNITED Synagogue Convention, Rabbi Kreitman urged Conservatism to reject permissiveness and to affirm halacha that was responsive to the times. "For without halacha," he said, "I cannot conceive of any Judaism."

Conceding that Conservatism had "hardly made any moves forward," and that each advance was painfully wracked with opposition and heartache, nevertheless, the time had come, he said, to move decisively in shaping a Conservative halacha. "One that each rabbi, synagogue and layman," would adhere to, or be expected to move out of the movement.

He indicated that the Dr. Robert Gordis' proposal for strengthening the Law Committee was a major step in this direction. Yet, he desired additional amendments to it . . . for effective enforcement, he added.

RABBI KREITMAN said opponents of the Gordis Plan were victims of "inferiority complexes" with "great guilt hang-ups" garbed in timidity and capitulating to fear and inaction. He stressed that a movement, a rabbi must shape the guidelines for its congregants, or be "ideologically bankrupt!"

Rabbi Hertzberg contested hotly the view of the need to carve a Conservative halacha and called for the abolition of the Law Committee. He insisted that a Conservative halacha win or without sanctions would be a losing proposition.

Rabbi Hertzberg maintained "that young Jews are now coming back to the center of the movement" and that at least a "generation in time" is needed to give them security before Conservatism solidifies itself. He, at the same time, pointed to the problems facing Israel not only with her native population but the Russian immigrants who have marriages of questionable halachic validity. "Israel cannot solve it within true halacha," he said, to prove his point that halachic guidelines were bound to lose more Jews than win, at this time.

He qualified his one generation waiting period by stating that even then "I would like to see the codification of many avenues, rather than one, in defining Conservative Judaism."

Chasiday Oomot Ha-olam

By RABBI SAMUEL SILVER
Every Jew ought to know the Hebrew term, "Chasiday Oomot

Silver
galem, outside of the huge Yad Va-shem (Hand and Name)

Ha-olam," which means the saintly people of the nations of the world. This idiom refers to the Christians who risked their lives to save Jews. In Jerusalem, outside of the huge Yad Va-shem (Hand and Name) memorial to the martyrs of Nazism there is a grove of trees. Each one of them has been planted in honor of a non-Jew who aided Jews in the time of the Holocaust. Each one of these heroes is brought to Israel at the expense of the government and is properly saluted.

The most recent tree in the lane of Chasiday Oomot Ha-olam honored an 80-year-old Swiss too ill to make the trip to the Holy Land. He is Paul Griniger, whose saga tells something about the country of Switzerland, that perennial neutral whose attitude towards the Jews has often been ambivalent.

In Hitler times, Jews desperately tried to get into Switzerland but the government said no and ordered all border guards to turn the Jews back. Griniger ignored the orders and allowed Jews to enter the country and even gave them false documents so they could remain. He is said to have rescued 3,000 Jews. For this the government of Switzerland fired him and blackballed him so that he had great trouble even making a living.

Recently on his birthday the Israeli consul in Berne, Aryeh Livavi, arranged for a testimonial to Griniger. On hand was Dr. Chaim Posner, a Yad Va-shem official who made the trip from Jerusalem, representatives of all Swiss Jewish organizations and many Christian clergy. In his thanks, Griniger described the hardships he had to endure for his noble behavior and wished the State of Israel well. In an act of contrition, the Swiss Government retroactively expressed regrets over its behavior towards the onetime policeman and paid him a generous pension.

Furthermore, the man's life and heroism has become the theme of a special TV program. (A. Gorin, in the Forward, where he does a digest of the foreign press).

QUEENS PROTEST SHOWS SPLIT WITH LEADERSHIP

NEW YORK — The split between the national Jewish organizations and the people they represent was never better exemplified than in the continuing fight of the Jews of Queens in protest against a low-income housing project, ground for which was broken last week.

The Queens Jewish Community Council is one of the leaders in the fight.

MEANWHILE THE ADL and the AJCongress have come out in support of the housing project, while the AJCommittee has asked for calm consideration.

The position of the national Jewish organizations has made little dent in the views of the Jews who reside in the area. The Queens Chapter of the ADL voted overwhelmingly to oppose the housing project thus taking a stand contrary to that of its national body.

A suit filed in behalf of the Association of Forest Hills, Inc., chartered by Mrs. Anita Margulis accused Mayor Lindsay and Housing Authority's Simeon Golar of "fraud," and said the two officials distorted data provided to the Planning Commission and the Board of Estimates.

THE NAACP entered the picture with a charge of race prejudice.

A huge rally set for next Sunday is expected to hear among others from Rabbi Wolfe Kelman and Rabbi Seymour Siegel, who was named president of the new national Jewish Security Committee, formed last week (P.O. Dec. 3) to come to the aid of Jews under attack. Rabbi Kelman is executive vice president of the Rabbinical Assembly of America.

In a letter to James E. Robinson, head of the Corona-East Elmhurst, Queens, branch of the NAACP, who made the allegation of race bias, Congressman Benjamin S. Rosenthal said:

"The Forest Hills project is not an example of 'scattersite' housing, but rather of 'fortress' housing. It is not the type of housing that can be integrated into the larger community."

Mr. Rosenthal called the development "impersonal human warehouses." He declared that wherever high-rise, concentrated public housing buildings had been tried "they have done little more than to transfer the ghetto culture from old buildings to new."

"It is a great mistake," he wrote, "to believe that all those who oppose this project are opposed either to the concept of public housing or efforts toward an integrated society."

A more angry retort to Mr. Robinson, who is an assistant district attorney in Queens, came from Jerry Birbach, a leader of the opposition to the project, who was attacked by Mr. Robinson as being racially prejudiced.

"I think Mr. Robinson and people like him are the real racists," he said. "He and others are trying to keep me from talking by accusing me of racism. They are the racists and bigots. Simeon Golar is a racist. He and others like him are looking for polarization. We are not."

Why No Jew As Vice President?

ROCK ISLAND, Ill. — Amid talk of a Black as a candidate for the Vice Presidency of the United States, Rabbi Mordecai Levy here termed as a "shattering observation" that "the vice presidency is still unavailable to the Jew, while the ascendancy to the job by others is casually noted."

The rabbi of the Tri-City Jewish Center here pointed out that Judah P. Benjamin was offered the Vice Presidency of the Confederate States, that Benjamin Disraeli was Prime Minister of England and Leon Blum and Mendes France Prime Minister of France.

Class Sees Superstar

CLEVELAND — The picketing incident here by eight youthful members of the Jewish Defense League when approximately 70 members of the Confirmation class of Park Synagogue embarked on buses to attend a performance of the concert version of "Jesus Christ Superstar," was a minor event.

The class had voted to attend the performance as one of its monthly social activities.

MICHAEL E. KORMAN, education director of the Conservative synagogue, called police when traffic was backed up, but there were no incidents.

The Confirmation class was briefed on the anti-Semitic aspects of the rock concert before attending. Rabbi Howard Hirsch told the class that "we are going because we feel anti-Semitism is not a dead issue." He added, according to the Cleveland Jewish News, that "there are parts of the New Testament which do not portray Jews in a favorable light and therefore it is not surprising to me that the show portrays Jews in an unfavorable light."

FOLLOWING THE performance the Jewish young people met with the actors after the show. The cast expressed the view that Superstar was not anti-Semitic.

THE JEWISH News published two letters in the issue in which the picketing was reported. One, signed by local executives of the National Conference of Synagogue Youth, the Young Israel Of Cleveland Youth Committee and Bnei Akiva of Cleveland, asserted that: "...we view ourselves as part of missing our religious beliefs and American life and culture, but heritage." not at the expense of compro-

Zionist Organization of America — ZOA

Slate No. 1

For American Delegates to the 28th World Zionist Congress

ZOA is the oldest, most influential and most visible Zionist force in America. It led the struggle for Israel's statehood — when other Zionist organizations timidly held back.

ZOA stands for loyal, all-out support of the policies of the incomparable Golda Meir, insisting upon genuine peace and security for Israel and full-scale assistance by the United States. ZOA remains pre-eminent among American Zionist bodies in mobilizing public opinion for Zionist objectives, in the best tradition of its great leaders: notably Louis D. Brandeis, Stephen S. Wise and Abba Hillel Silver.

ZOA leaders and rank-and-file members have been the prime movers for, and are identified with, all major American fund-raising for Israel. They have served to found, support and expand the United Jewish Appeal, Israel Bonds and the Jewish National Fund, both nationally and in their local communities.

ZOA is the only major Zionist organization to denounce on moral grounds a deal "reached in the night" by Hadassah, Labor (Socialist) Zionists and Mizrahi concerning distribution of American delegates to the Zionist Congress. Following a trial in Jerusalem, the Congress Tribunal threw out that deal, saying: "We declare that the inter-party agreement is of no effect and we instruct that it should not be followed."

ZOA repudiates the insinuation that it is "affiliated" with a political party in Israel. This is a baseless accusation cast by Hadassah and its new "partners" under the simplistic slogan of "non-party Zionists." This is too shoddy to fool anyone.

ZOA is impelled to alert Hadassah women around the country (and likewise their Zionist husbands) that Hadassah's officialdom in New York is in effect transforming their organization into a satellite of the ruling political Labor Party of Israel. This is a policy which is calculated to damage the independence and credibility of American Zionism in times of crisis.

ZOA stands for a progressive society in Israel, concerned for the welfare of all Israelis, the centrality of Israel in Jewish life and the unity of the Jewish people.

ZOA presents a platform that expresses the point of view not only of the husbands and wives who are ZOA members, but of almost all registered Zionists, not identified with the "left" or the "right," who are the mainstream of the middle-of-the-road American men and women in every walk of life, and upon whom the vigor of the Zionist movement and the welfare of Israel depend.

ZOA calls especially upon the women of all organizations which are primarily engaged in fund-raising for worthwhile projects in Israel to remember that their husbands and fathers, sons and brothers have given them substantial financial support. Now it is most appropriate for them and their menfolk to vote ZOA Slate No. 1, the guardian of Zionist ideals.

Obituary

Arthur Spingarn, 93; President Of NAACP

NEW YORK — Arthur B. Spingarn, a Jewish attorney who was president of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, succeeding his brother in that office, died here at the age of 93. His brother was Joel Spingarn. The present president is also a Jew — Kivie Kaplan, of Boston.

Arthur Spingarn refused permission for an interview by The P-O some years ago on the grounds that spreading knowledge that the organization was headed by a Jew was not in its best interests. In his long obituary in the "New York Times" there was no mention of his Jewishness.

Rabbi G. Schlesinger

BUENOS AIRES — Grand Rabbi Guillermo Schlesinger, spiritual leader of Argentine Jewry since 1937, died here after a short illness. He was 68 years old.

Harry Rogoff

NEW YORK — Harry Rogoff, editor in chief of The Jewish Daily Forward from 1951 to 1964 and one of its active columnists died here at the age of 88. He succeeded Abraham Cahan, who brought him to the publication in 1907 as city editor.

BRIDGE

Is Jewish

DALLAS — When bridge instructor, Mrs. Edna Siegel, at the Jewish Community Center was asked to submit a report on the sessions which included the relevance of the activity to Judaism, she was stumped and asked her class what there is about bridge which was particularly Jewish.

One member responded that the King and Queen in the deck are King David and Esther, while a second pointed out that most of the top bridge players are Jewish.

Arsonists Burn Ha'olam Hazeh

TEL AVIV — Police are searching for arsonists who set fire to the offices of "Ha'olam Hazeh," the Israeli weekly which is often compared to "Playboy" Magazine. Firemen found evidence of arson in the editorial offices of the paper which has made many enemies by its outspoken comments and use of sex photographs and articles.

Lou Boyar Disarms Assailant

Lou Boyar, of Los Angeles, who makes his home in Israel, is not only in the top echelon of American Jewish leaders who aid Israel, but now he is being hailed as a hero who grabbed a gun from a would-be attacker aboard a United Airline plane en route from L.A. to Washington. Lou's attention was first called to the fracas when he saw a passenger in the first class lounge walk over and slam his fist into the face of another passenger, from whose back pocket he yanked a gun. Lou was unaware at the time that the man attacked was a detective, one of a pair transporting a prisoner back east for trial, according to Jewish Heritage, of Los Angeles. Lou managed to stick his finger into the gun's chamber to stop any possible pulling of the trigger, and finally wrested the gun from the assailant's hand. In an instant the fray was over, and the second prisoner was safely handcuffed, a process in which Lou was glad to be of assistance, because only about then did he begin to realize the danger he had just faced. Lou had one casualty, his costly wristwatch, which he was hoping United Airlines might want to replace.

The Pope In The Movie

Princess Margaret and Lord Snowdon were among the viewers who attended a charity premiere of "The Shoes of The Fisherman," in London, in which one scene shows the Pope, (Anthony Quinn) disguised as a humble priest who walks the streets of Rome incognito. When he was asked by a doctor to bring medicine for an old man who was ill and dying, he begins the Catholic last rites. The family cries out in horror, explaining that they are Jews. Without pausing for a second, the priest leads those assembled in Hebrew prayer.

Female Heads Orthodox Congregation

Sharon

No eyebrows were raised at Beth Jacob Congregation, Baltimore, when Sharon Zal-esch, 17, was elected president of the Young People's Congregation. The congregation is Orthodox, and it is believed that Sharon is the first girl to head an Orthodox young people's congregation, according to Rabbi Uri Miller, a former president of the Rabbinical Council of America. Sharon's father, Harold is vice-president of the congregation, while her mother holds a similar post with the Sisterhood.

The Great Grandmother

Mrs. Herbert H. Lehman was a great-grandmother when the Steven Lashes became the parents of a son in November. The mom is the former Wendy Lehman, whose father, killed in World War II, was the son of Gov. and Mrs. Lehman. Wendy's mother is Mrs. Richard Korn, wife of the former president of the American Council for Judaism. The infant's dad is a Wall Street stockbroker.

Like Mother Like Son

On hand for the 20-acre rose garden to be dedicated this month in Haifa in memory of his mother, Rose Halparin, of Los Angeles, will be her son, Monty Hall, who is host of the ABC-TV network program, "Let's Make A Deal." Like his mother, Monty is an inveterate fund-raiser and was guest of honor at the final football game of Wichita State University for the families of those football players killed in the plane crash last year (and those of Marshall University) he raised $500,000. So heavily involved in fund-raising for various projects is he that his wife Marilyn told "Heritage," Los Angeles Jewish weekly, that she's "grateful to the various organizations he works for when they occasionally allow Monty to remain at home with me for an evening."

Peace Through Science

That reconciliation between Russia and Israel and China and Israel could come about through scientific exchanges was ad-duced by Dr. Albert Sabin, president of the Weizmann Institute of Science before guests at the annual dinner at the Waldorf-Astoria. The developer of the oral vaccine for polio told the 2,000 in attendance that two years ago before it was fashionable to visit China, the Institute's late Dr. Adler had accepted an invitation to China for medical evaluations.

Sabin

He received VIP treatment. Then in October Prof. Seiler of the Institute addressed by invitation a Russian science seminar in

Feinberg

Moscow where he was lauded and treated with the highest respect due a man of his stature. The affair was chaired by Abraham Feinberg, whose election as to succeed Dewey Stone as head of the Institute was announced.

The Fourth Estate

Boris Smolar, former editor-in-chief of the Jewish Telegraphic Agency, was cited at the final banquet of the recent general assembly of the Council of Jewish Federations and Welfare Funds for his many services in the field of Jewish journalism. The annual Smolar prize for outstanding work in journalism will first be awarded in 1972 . . . Leon E. Brown, editor of The Jewish Exponent, will receive the William J. Blitman Lodge of B'nai B'rith Fourth Estate Award for the newspaperman who "best exemplifies the 'Blitman Creed' of digging, not just reporting and who produces and disseminates good, solid well-written news during the year."

Water In The Negev

Larry Glick, WBZ (Boston) radio question and answer disc jockey, told his nationwide audience Thursday that 10 men headed by George Gershman and John Shelley of Worcester, Mass. would go to the southern Negev in Israel next summer to find water. The pair are professional dousers who have operated successfully and obtained well waters for farmers in Massachusetts. The matter came up while Gershman was talking by three-way telephone with Glick and Richard Brown, psychiatrist of Huntington Beach, Calif. about dreaming about finding water by the douser method and then finding it the next day where his dream said he would. Dr. Brown suggested Glick could improve his work by filling a glass full of water before he went to bed and drinking half of it before retiring and the other half on arising.

Names

No mention was made of Rabbi Simon Dolgin's pulpit in Beverly Hills, Calif. in the announcement of his appointment as Director-General of the Ministry of Religious Affairs, a post second only to that of the Cabinet Minister. The news account in The Jerusalem Post stated that Rabbi Dolgin had become a citizen of Israel . . . His intention to bequeath his body to science was declared by Avraham Harman, president of the Hebrew University . . . Mapmaker for the United Nations is Nathaniel O. Abelson, a retired naval officer who provides the world's diplomats with immediate maps when some special part of the world, as in the case of the fighting on the border between East Pakistan and India erupted, comes before their attention.

Elected

Sol Kanev, of Winnipeg, was elected president of the Canadian Jewish Congress. Laurence Alan Tisch has been named president of the American Society for Technion-Israel Institute of Technology.

Appointed

Rabbi Benjamin Kahn, for 12 years national director of the B'nai B'rith Hillel Foundations, has been named executive vice president of B'nai B'rith, succeeding the late Rabbi Jay Kaufman.

Sermon Of The Week

Jewish Youth: Left But Not Gone — Michael D. Resnick, president, Temple Israel Youth Group, Detroit.

Quotation Of The Week

What disturbs me most, at the moment, is the impression of some of our young people who feel that if they cannot in intellectual honesty believe the stories both Biblical and rabbinic in origin that they were told when they were young, that the only alternative is complete detachment from Judaism and its teachings. The astounding thing is that not only are there a multitude of views of the basic beliefs of Judaism expressed within the Bible and the rabbinic literature but, even today, there is a constant proliferation of views stimulated by the modern world and its contemporary philosophies. That's why Judaism is, in reality, perpetually young. We have a flexibility and adaptability to current thinking. In our faith doubt and wonder, questioning and searching are more to be admired, in my view, than absolute certainty. The dogmatist frightens me far more than the skeptic. So ask your questions. That's fine. But don't make a dogma yourself out of perplexity and surely not out of ignorance. Search and while searching — learn. — Rabbi Sidney H. Brooks, Temple Israel, Omaha.

WHAT ABOUT MOHAMMED

ATLANTA, Ga. — When non-Jews visiting Congregation Beth Jacob ask assistant Rabbi Herbert J. Cohen what he thinks of Jesus, he doesn't go into the Jewish view of the founder of Christianity, but does indulge in a Jewish characteristic. He responds with a question of his own.

"What do you think of Mohammed?" he asks and evidently the message gets across.

The New Theme Song

When the Black Panthers first began demonstrating in Jerusalem, the American Jewish community, except for a few courageous individuals like Rabbi Arthur Hertzberg, began to crawl into their shells. The Jewish leadership charged that the facts were being exaggerated, but their real pain was because Jews were held up to the public as less than perfect human beings in the daily press.

Our diaspora slip was showing.

One Jewish newspaper began to run also, but for the most part, this controversial subject wasn't discussed editorially, although news coverage was ample.

Now, mirabilu dictu, the "poverty-line" has taken its place alongside the Bar-Lev line, according to Moshe Rivlin, director-general of the Jewish Agency, as the stimulus that causes the dollars to flow from the pockets of those who participate in United Jewish Appeal missions.

The UJA is not overlooking any bets, and if playing up the poverty of a large section of Israelis, will increase the flow of gift dollars, then that is the theme song to play.

Golda Meir and other Israeli dignitaries reacted with more than impatience over the Black Panther incident, and now that uprising by courageous young Oriental Jews will play its role in supporting the Jewish Establishment, not only in Israel, but in the United States Jewish community also.

New Koch Bill Needed?

We cannot agree with those American Jewish leaders who used their influence to persuade Rep. Koch to withdraw his Bill which would have provided 30,000 U.S. visas for Russian Jews. True enough, U.S. officials have announced that provision will be made for those Russian Jews who knock at our doors, but this ignores the real intent of the Koch Bill which was as much if not more political than it was humanitarian.

Had the bill become law, it would have put the U.S. on record as recognizing the treatment Russia metes out to a minority. It seems to us that this was not a victory, but a defeat in the fight to secure an amelioration of the plight of Russian Jewry.

It is possible that our leadership was convinced by the Administration that in exchange for taking it off the spot, Mr. Nixon would pursue the issue when he travels to Moscow. That kind of trade would be understandable.

If such an arrangement was not made, then it behooves our leadership to begin working now so that the views of America are presented to the Kremlin leaders when the Moscow conferences do take place.

The EDITOR'S CHAIR

The next time we feel constrained to charge the Jewish Telegraphic Agency with being a structure of the Jewish Establishment, and the next time we think in terms of pointing out that the bane of the Jewish press is the JTA because it relieves the Jewish editors of the need for seeking out the news, we will read over the following article that the JTA released from the pen of Dr. Judah J. Shapiro.

We are not unfamiliar with Judah and his views, but he says it so well this time that even though the JTA can sue us for reprinting a copyrighted article, we'll take our chance.

One of these days, we would like to ask Judah to explain how it is that the local federations and national Jewish organizations could be so far behind the needs and views of the Jews that make possible these organizations, but for now just read what he has to say:

Marshall McLuhan in his work "Understanding Media," had explained this phenomenon in the business world. According to him: "Any innovation threatens the equilibrium of existing organizations. In big industry new ideas are invited to rear their heads so that they may be clobbered at once. The idea department of a big firm is a sort of lab for isolating dangerous viruses. When one is found, it is assigned to a group for neutralizing and immunizing treatment. It is comical, therefore, when anybody applies to a big corporation with a new idea that would result in a great 'increase of production and sales.' Such an increase would be a disaster for the existing management. They would have to make way for new management. Therefore, no new idea ever starts from within a big corporation. It must assail the organization from outside . . ."

If we address ourselves to the Jewish Establishments of most communities, we observe how the pressure for innovations and adaptations to new conditions comes from individuals and groups on the outside, more and more often the youth. Within the Jewish community, there is an interesting sidelight to consider. There are no democratic patterns, and certainly no elections so that new platforms and programs, when they do become accepted are carried out by the remaining Establishment, which opposed them in the first place. It is as though a Republican administration realizing that the will of the people had swung to the Democratic platform and proposals said: "It is unnecessary to change the administration. We Republicans will now conduct a Democratic program."

One needs only to observe that the Jewish communal Establishment that opposed the very activities that have become central to American Jewry, have now become the implementers of those activities. Over a period of years, that Establishment was consistently wrong in its opposition to ideas and those who expounded them. It was wrong on Zionism and the State of Israel; it was wrong on Soviet Jewry; it was wrong on Jewish education and youth; it was wrong in its acceptance of what was supportable by the rich as the equivalent of a system of normative Judaism. Now, the anti-Zionists and those who dissociated themselves from Israel as a Jewish state control the raising of funds for Israel and sit within the Jewish Agency — Republicans become Democrats. Staff members recall being chided only two years ago by their executives for identifying with the efforts on behalf of Soviet Jewry, but today Soviet Jewry is an Establishment domain. Nor did those executives apologize to the staff members for having been wrong. Jewish youth is alive and well and asking for support of Jewish education and for a return to Jewish normative values unrelated to the wishes of the rich to relegate them to other, nether, levels of Jewish organization.

There is another dimension of today's Establishment that comes into question: Today, it is mainly in the hands of a "management" group which has replaced the laity. It can best be understood in Michael Harrington's "The Accidental Century," a critique of "peoples' capitalism," wherein he indicates that with so many people owning small pieces of a business by virtue of their share-holding, the ownership realistically falls into the hands of the managers. So also in the Jewish communities of America today, with many givers supporting the community, and with no democratic processes at work, it is the executive management which controls and conducts the Community's business, without reference to the people. This results in a new struggle within the Establishment itself.

The substance of what has been presented is, therefore, that Jewish communal life is threatened by its "management," more generally called the "Establishment." The threats are, as described, a continuing incumbency by those who have been consistently wrong in judging what was basic to the Jews of America. There is no accountability for their errors of judgement or performance, and they are self-perpetuating, though they rarely display leadership but are reluctant ex post facto followers. The Establishment suppresses the heresy of truth and insight, and now denies the professionals, or "technicians," "scope for creativity and the application of knowledge." By these terms, it is doing its job.

Israelis, Russian Jews, We — Look At Chanukah

By RABBI MAURICE DAVIS

Chanukah — and each one sees it as he will. Pitiful, proud or pained.

There are those — the pitiful ones — who turn away, shrugging their shoulders to show how little it means. They see it as a day of tinsel, gift-wrapped gifts, and homes bedecked in pale but frenetic imitation of Christmas. Traumatic for whom Christmas is precious (but not really Christians!) while Chanukah is Jewish (but not really precious!).

THERE ARE THOSE, the Israelis, for whom it is a holiday of unending pride. A finger pointing from the past, and straight at them. A land where every man is Maccabee, and all about them is a kind of déjà vu. Their struggle for the right to be is but another round of what the man called Judah first began. No wonder that they take these days to be their very own. Theirs was the land, and theirs is the mood. And theirs is the pride that turns the phrase from "there" to "here." Nes gadol hayah po — a great miracle happened here!

There are those, the Jews of Russia, who more than all the rest relive the days that were before the days of that first Chanukah. Antiochus was not a Hitler bent on killing all the Jews. His was the mood of Russia to destroy not men but faith, to wipe away not Jews but all the things that made them Jews: Their faith, their culture, their integrity. Save the body, kill the soul, and make them worship as their masters do.

THE JEWS OF Russia read the words. The old man Mattathias in the village of Modin. "Though all the people under the king obey and fall away each from his father's faith, yet shall I, and my sons, and my kindred walk in the faith of our fathers."

They read the words, and weep because for them there is no Mattathias. Theirs is the setting, the preface to Chanukah, and no way to make it happen once again.

And there you have them, pitiful, proud, and pained. And by the way, which are we? Where do we hide, or find, ourselves? I'd like to think that we are none of these. A little bit of each, perhaps, but none of these.

FOR US THE path is still uncharted, but the goal is not. Let us light the candles; the light of love and learning, of knowing what we are and why, of holding high and reaching out, of looking back and looking forth. Yes, let us light the candles, and watch them pierce the night.

JDL NOT TO BLAME

MOSCOW — If there were a local chapter of the Jewish Defense League here it could be blamed for the swastikas there were daubed on cars of diplomats of several Arab countries in front of the Hotel Rossiya. Inside, a banquet was being given in honor of a visiting Jordanian delegation.

LOAN FUNDS AID MANY

A total of 34 loan funds in such far distant countries as Uruguay, Australia, Finland, Turkey and elsewhere, dispensed 2,700 loans to Jewish artisans, craftsmen, shopkeepers and others in the amount of $2.7 million in 1970.

Dynamism And Stagnation In Israel

By M.Z. FRANK

In this country dynamism alternates with stagnation, innovation which arouses the wonder of the world often lives side by side with stupid conservatism, vision is the neighbor of outmoded provincial myopia.

There are many reasons for this complexity of contrasts and many explanations — by those who care to probe and explain.

It was a great vision to lay the cornerstone of the Hebrew University in 1918 while the guns still thundered. Weizmann did it. It took audacity on the part of Weizmann to open the University on April 1, 1925 — with practically the whole world in attendance when it had so little to show.

TODAY, IN 1971, the Hebrew University has world fame and world reputation. It is now merely the largest and oldest of the universities in Israel — there are also Bar-Ilan and Tel-Aviv and Beersheva and Haifa — not to speak of the Technion and the American College.

And yet — right in Jerusalem, the gold mine of anthropology, where any devotee of that science can find cultures of almost any clime and any age all crowded within one city — the Hebrew University has no department of anthropology worth noting!

I have heard that observation before, but no one brought the fact home to me more forcefully than Professor Russell about whom I wrote in my last column.

Alex Russell has introduced into the work of looking after retarded children, or problem children, the discipline of social anthropology, along with psychology and other disciplines. "A civilization" he argues, "is judged by the way it helps the weakest members of society." A sound Jewish principle, practiced according to the most advanced methods of modern science.

SOME JEWS came here as dedicated idealists, but their idealism spent itself in time. Some came as ordinary provincials riding the tide of a great historic wave. Some were simply worn out by the effort to adjust. The cumbersome administrative practices in Israel which eat up so much of one's time and energies, have their effect in inducing apathy and resistance to change or innovation.

Out of somewhere — sometimes out of a new group of sabras, sometimes out of some newcomers with vision, or out of Israelis who have been abroad and learned, — comes a new spurt for innovation, for re-examination for adaptation to the current situation and for planning for the future. Every innovator or group of innovators has to fight the languid conservative habits, the vested interests. The army is so constituted that innovation is constant and meets with no resistance. Most other fields of activity in Israel are saddled with resistance to innovation. Some manage to resist necessary reforms for years.

On the whole — outside the army, progress in Israel does not proceed on an even keel.

ALEX RUSSELL has managed to break through the barnacles. He has managed to attract to the work he has been doing some of the best brains in the world, some members of his family, some of the best people in Israel.

The particular work we observed on the day I went to Jerusalem on behalf of the Malben-JDC had to do with mothers and children who required watching for any complications. There is one way of doing that work — the narrow confines of the institution. Another way is to extend it to the family of the child, to its habits, to the immediate milieu, to collecting data and deducing lessons, to bringing in other sciences to help.

Alex Russell has done just that.

FOR INSTANCE: he has discovered that in nearly all cases where a mentally retarded man marries a mentally retarded woman, the marriage has been arranged by a shadchan. He has discovered that in many children's institutions the women who take care of their wards merely attend to their physical needs but fail to give them the love and the attention which normal parents give their children, with the result that the children grow up listless and show no interest in learning. And so on.

One of Dr. Russell's collaborators decided to open a clinic for Arab women and children on the West Bank. But Dayan had laid down a policy that the Jews should do nothing to impose their practices on the Arabs. The doctor asked the military governor. The latter said we cannot give our consent. What does that mean? It means we cannot provide you with protection. But if we go on our own, will you dislodge us by force? No, it merely means you are doing what you are at your own risk. The clinic was opened and in time became very popular with the Arabs. There is nothing in Dayan's policy which says Jews should not help Arabs when the Arabs ask for assistance.

APART FROM selfless dedication tempered by shrewd practicality, — and a dedication which is contagious and draws in gifted friends, relatives and strangers, who become fired with the desire to give of their best to Israel — Alex Russell is also possessed of inexhaustible energy, which, among other outlets, finds its channel in talking and expounding his views.

What started out as a routine visit to an institution in the kind of which I had never had much interest, turned out to be a fascinating — and inspiring experience.

I doubt if Malben realizes what a treasure they have there. Perhaps they do — they sent me there.

GREETINGS FROM ISRAEL

Orthodox Are Split Over Conscription

By RABBI ISRAEL B. KOLLER

When a law is discussed in the Knesset and it has religious implications, the lines are clearly drawn. The Orthodox defend every religious law while the non-Orthodox seek its abolition or liberalization. Recently the Knesset was treated to a debate that was entirely between the Orthodox political parties.

Koller IN 1953 the Knesset passed a law exempting Orthodox girls from military service and requiring them to serve in a National Service Corps. Most Orthodox girls complied. The ultra-Orthodox evaded the law. This evasion gave rise to anti-religious reaction and demands that the law be strictly enforced. Defense Minister Moshe Dayan said many times that the number of Orthodox girls who evade the law is too inconsequential to be made into a religious cause celebre.

The conservative, ultra-Orthodox Agudah party was perfectly happy to retain the status quo. But the more liberal, more progressive, more moderate and far larger National Religious Party felt that all girls, especially Orthodox, should make their contributions to the defense and safety of Israel. What Moshe Dayan and other non-religious Israelis were reluctant to do, National Religious Party Knesset Member Zvulun Hammer accomplished. He introduced a bill authorizing the Ministry of Defense to enforce the National Service Act impartially and without favoritism. Mr. Hammer was supported by the other eleven members of his party. He was bitterly opposed by Menahem Porush and five members of the intransigent Agudah.

RABBI PORUSH intimated that Mr. Hammer was a stalking horse for the supposedly perfidious, irreverent, unobservant anti-religious government of Golda Meir. The enforcement of the law would be opposed by his followers and their daughters would rather sit in jail than comply with its particulars. The walls of the ultra-Orthodox section of Jerusalem were plastered with anti-National Religious Party slogans.

There may be a lesson in all this for those who are Conservative or Reform Jews and who wish to see a diminution of religious strife in Israel. Before it is too late and before less responsible and more volatile hands pick up the banner, the progressive elements of Orthodoxy should be encouraged. Reform and Conservatism have much more in common with them than they have in common with the obscurantism and obstructionism of a Porush.

Somewhat Modified Though

Kashrut Advocated By Reform Rabbi

WORCESTER, Mass. — be to enhance Jewish home Kashrut can have great value for the Reform Movement is the view of Rabbi Joseph Klein, here.

The spiritual leader of Temple Emanuel, who is an officer of the Central Conference of American Rabbis, added that: "Members of Reform congregations are as much in need of daily Jewish disciplines as are members of Orthodox congregations."

HE SAID that "Kashrut provides such a discipline," but that "it may have to be a modified kind of kashrut that is not as demanding as Talmudic law requires, but its functions will

Rabbi Klein said that "Little effort is made in any Reform congregations to encourage members to maintain a kosher home. Even those synagogues," he continued, "which ban Biblically forbidden foods from their premises do nothing to encourage their members at least to emulate the synagogue in home dietary practices."

He then pointed out that he knew of "no literature issued by the CCAR or Union of American Hebrew Congregations in the 20th Century which mentions pro or con the movement's position on the dietary laws."

AFTER STATING that the CCAR and the UAHC conventions prefer non-kosher hotels and restaurants in sharp contrast to the Orthodox and Conservative branches of Judaism, he said that "many members of Reform congregations when they celebrate a bar mitzvah or wedding are insistent that kosher food be served at the festivities."

He concluded that "For too long we of the Reform Movement have been hiding our heads in the sand with respect to a vital aspect of Jewish religious life."

Schrage Disbands Civil Patrols

BROOKLYN — Rabbi Samuel Schrage has disbanded his Maccabees, a volunteer group who patrolled the streets of the Crown Heights section to provide security for its residents harassed by muggings and stickups. Founded in 1964, the Maccabees at one time boasted 500 men, who while unarmed, did not act themselves but used walkie talkie and radio to contact police headquarters whenever they encountered violence in the streets.

Jesus Dropped From Prayer

JACKSON, Miss. — When Robert Berman took exception to the use of Jesus in a public prayer before one of the University of Mississippi football games, he so wrote to Dr. Porter Fortune, Chancellor.

In return came a friendly letter from the head of the state school who said he was pleased to hear from one of the grads and "grateful that you brought to my attention a matter which I am certain has been the result of an oversight on the part of the young people who have been responsible for preparing their own prayer each week."

He said he had spoken to the athlete selected to deliver the prayer for that Saturday and was taking appropriate action for the future to see that the error was not repeated.

Congregational Leadership Uninvolved

By MYRON SCHOEN

There have been a rash of articles in Jewish periodicals of late about leadership problems in institutions of the American Jewish community. "Congregations everywhere are finding a declining pool of capable members who are ready and willing to accept positions of leadership, particularly as officers, but also as directors and committee chairmen," states Walter C. Baron, F.T.A., Administrator of Temple Israel, Minneapolis, writing in the Fall, 1971 issue of the "NATA Quarterly."

Schoen

BARON'S PIECE is not of the usual gevalt variety. It is a perceptive analysis of the situation facing many synagogues and before he gets through with his article, "On Congregational Leadership," he has set before his colleagues and the rabbis of congregations affiliated with the Union of American Hebrew Congregations a well-developed thesis for meeting the changing conditions they face.

The base of the difficulty, according to Baron, is that many have accepted leadership with an entirely different concept from what the rabbi and professionals believe. "They do not plan to attend worship services weekly, to register in adult education courses, to be present at all social functions, to be active in the work of committees . . . though they will accept responsibility for the financial problems. . ."

THE PICTURE is not all dark. Baron acknowledges that this new type of leadership does have a sense of commitment to Judaism and a concern for the synagogue. While they may be new to congregational leadership, they do have experience with other voluntary associations.

How do they view their responsibility? "The new type of leadership often construes its responsibility as that of conservation and maintenance of the status quo, with few risks to be taken that could possibly rock the boat."

However, Baron is not trying to denigrate the new leadership and he recognizes that the amazing growth in the size and scope of the synagogue program has created entirely new conditions, making it almost impossible for contemporary leaders to devote themselves to the degree that their predecessors did. "The less directly and personally involved new leadership will serve essentially as decision-makers who will determine the program of the temple based primarily on the ideas of others — on proposals made by the various committees and other interest groups of the congregation," writes this Administrative-Secretary of the National Association of Temple Administrators.

WHY THIS CHANGE in roles? Baron believes that this is the way most communal service associations operate these days. There is little participation in the day-to-day operations, no depth of knowledge of progress between board sessions — merely making decisions on policy at monthly meetings. Thus, the burden falls upon the professional staff.

If Baron's analysis is correct, the burden is going to fall heavily upon the rabbi, and in the larger congregations on the rabbi and the professional staff — the administrator, the educator and the youth director. They will not only have the job of seeing that the programs of the congregation are carried out, but more and more they will be required to undertake the painstaking work of preparing program details.

"Inherent in this newer form of leadership is the need, more than ever before, for the staff to inform officers and directors meticulously and constantly about what is going on in the temple," Baron asserts. "The leaders will have but limited knowledge, if any of current happenings in the temple, with the exception, perhaps, of a single area of interest. Adequate briefing for such leadership requires not concise summaries of problems but, instead, full-length, detailed descriptive reports."

CHANGING LEADERSHIP patterns are reflective of similar changes in the membership of our congregations. Baron believes that membership participation is becoming more selective and that we must face both problems realistically and develop new approaches to meet them. It's essential reading for anyone concerned with the future of the synagogue. Copies will be made available, while they last, by writing to NATA, 838 Fifth Ave., New York City, 10021.

THE ECONOMIC VIEW

No Easy Solution To Oriental Jews' Problem

By SAMSON KRUPNICK

When in recent months Israeli Black Panthers and other dissidents carried on demonstrations against "discrimination," they focused attention on a very delicate socioeconomic problem. Hitherto, to have spoken above a discreet whisper on the subject of the income and social gap between the Asia-Africa family group as compared to the Europe-American family group was like touching an exposed nerve with a sharp instrument. Understandably, Jews are very sensitive to a charge of discrimination against anyone. They are particularly sensitive to the accusation of perpetuating a "status quo" in group or class distinction.

THESE DEMONSTRATIONS, strangely served a useful purpose. They helped put into motion a thorough expert study of the entire problem under the able direction of former Governor of the Bank of Israel, David Horowitz. The Committee's report indicated with corroborating statistics that the gap between the two groups was narrowing considerably. For example, gross income of the Asia-Africa family group had risen by 46 per cent in the past four years compared to only a 25 per cent increase in the Europe-America group. Net income after taxes was 98.6 per cent of gross income in the lower bracket larger family Asia-Africa group compared to 74.4 per cent of the Europe-America family group.

If one were to judge the comparative improved standards of living on the basis of ownership of appliances and modern conveniences, the Asia-Africa family group has in the last decade not only overtaken the Europe-America family group in refrigerator and TV set ownership but has actually outstripped them in cooking stoves and washing machine ownership. However, as I pointed out in a previous column on the subject, the more crucial areas of disparity between the two groups exist in housing and education. Taking into account the cold fact that fully 50 per cent of Israel's population are from Asia-Africa countries of origin, the overwhelming majority of whom were completely underprivileged, undereducated, underemployed, underskilled and undercapitalized, the remarkable progress made in virtually every area of improvement of the standard of living of this group is truly amazing.

THIS MARKED PROGRESS is true even in housing. The "before and after" picture is still visible in some sections of the country where the old tin and asbestos huts, the now abandoned "maabarot," stand below new high rise apartment communities or neat cottage moshavim. The Horowitz Committee called attention to the improvement in the housing disparity by citing the occupancy statistics. Fully 49 per cent of the Asia-Africa family group in 1960 lived at a density of three or more persons per crowded condition. Only two per cent in the Europe-America family group. By 1970, only 17 per cent of the Asia-Africa family group continued in this crowded condition. Only two per cent of this group lived in a one room or more per person in 1960. By 1970 this number had increased to nine per cent but was still less than 50 per cent of that of the Europe-America family group.

True, there is a substantial narrowing of the gap, but there obviously remains a wide gulf of disparity that it will take years to bridge. Despite hasty and well meaning promises made by various officials throughout the country, a crash breakthrough in housing is virtually impossible while a wartime economy continues and while Israel is absorbing, as she must, 40,000 or more olim per year.

Another crucial area of disparity reflecting directly on earning capacity is that of education, or more accurately, the lack of it. In Israel the relationship is clear and direct. Persons with no schooling earned IL 540 per month in 1970. Those with 1-4 years earned IL 685; those with 5-8 years IL 785; those with 9-10 years IL 985; those with 11-12 years IL 1160 and those with more than 12 years of education (attending University) IL 1460 per month.

REGRETFULLY, the average number of school years of children in Asia-Africa families is 6 while for Europe-America families it is 11. In the age group 20-29 only 1.6 per cent in Asia-Africa families were students compared with 12.6 per cent in Europe-America families. More encouraging is the progress made on the high school level. Between 1964-1970 high school attendance in the Europe-America family group increased from 61 to 77 per cent while in the Asia-Africa group the percentage increased more strikingly from 27 to 44 per

Dear Mr. Pearlroth: I would appreciate it if you could tell me the origin and meaning of my last name DEENER. I was told it is German meaning servant. My grandparents are from Russia. Thank you very much. Sincerely, Elynn Deener, Norman, Oklahoma.

Deener — correctly Diener — is German for "a servant." It is one particular kind of servant. It denotes either the sexton of a synagogue or the representative of a large business establishment. Your family did not originate in Russia proper, but very likely in Warsaw, Poland.

WHAT FOODS THESE MORSELS BE

Specialties To Mark Advent Of Chanukah

By SARAH LIEBER

Pancakes, fritters, latkes, whatever variety you enjoy, make excellent and traditional Chanukah servings. Some people make small kugelach using the same batter as would usually go into the latkes.

Sarah For parties and company refreshments, cookies and cakes can have the candle or draydel motif as decoration. There are special cookie cutters in shapes associated with all the holidays. Ask your local dealer in Jewish items.

POTATO LATKES

1½ pounds potatoes (4 medium), pared
1 small onion, grated
2 eggs, slightly beaten
2 tbsps. potato starch
½ tsp. salt
¼ tsp. nutmeg
3 tbsps. oil
Grate potatoes; drain well. Stir in onion. (Some people use the blender for both. Follow instructions by manufacturer of your model.) Add slightly beaten eggs. Mix in seasoning and potato starch. Heat oil in skillet over moderate heat. Drop potato mixture by rounded tablespoonfuls onto heated oil in skillet. Spread into flat cakes.

Fry until golden brown on bottom side. Turn and brown on other side. Drain on absorbent paper. Serve with Orange Applesauce (recipe below).

ORANGE APPLESAUCE

1 can (1 pound) applesauce or 2 cups homemade ¼ cup frozen orange juice concentrate, undiluted, thawed.
Stir together to blend. Taste and add cinnamon if desired. Garnish with orange slices.

½ tsp. baking powder
1½ tps. salt

Peel and core fruit and cut into ½ inch slices, making rounds. Soak slices in wine for one hour. Drain well and coat each slice with batter. To prepare batter sift together dry ingredients. Beat with egg and water using rotary beater until batter is smooth. Batter should be heavy enough to coat fruit, add more water or flour as needed. Melt margarine in skillet, using enough to come up 1½ inches. Heat until a cube of bread browns in 1 minute. Drop coated fruit slices into hot fat and fry 1 to 2 minutes on each side until browned. Drain on absorbent paper. Sprinkle with powdered sugar if desired. Serve hot.

WINE COOKIES

1 cup parve margarine
¾ cup sugar
1 wine glass sweet wine
4½ cups flour
1 tsp. baking powder
½ tsp. salt

Cream margarine with sugar until light and fluffy. Gradually add wine. Sift dry ingredients together and stir into creamed mixture, a small amount at a time until dough is stiff but not too hard to handle. Roll out on lightly floured board to ¼ inch thickness. Cut with fancy cutters. Bake on greased cookie sheets 10 to 12 minutes at 350 degrees until lightly browned. Remove to rack to cool. Frost as desired or decorate with colored sprinkles, chopped nuts or candied fruits.

Flashbacks In Jewish History

Great Maggid Of Mezritch

By RABBI A.P. BLOCH

November 26, 1771 — Rabbi Dov Baer of Mezritch, known as the Great Maggid, died two centuries ago in the town of Anipoli.

Bloch

The Maggid ranks second in the chain of the founders of Hassidism. A scholar of note and a man of deep piety he accepted with resignation the penury which was the common lot of the average east-European rabbi. The income from his teaching profession and the negligible fees which he received as an itinerant preacher were not sufficient to feed his family. Malnutrition afflicted many poor Jewish homes where meat was served only on the Sabbath. In the case of the Maggid, malnutrition was endemic to his way of life. His religious fervor found its outlet in endless fasts. This abstinence sapped his strength and brought on fainting spells.

A VISITING rabbi who called on the sickly Maggid was shocked by his appearance. He reprimanded him for his practice of excessive self-mortification and informed him of the emergence of a saintly mystic by the name of Rabbi Israel Baal Shem Tov who preached a piety through exultation and joy. This conversation marked a decisive turning point in the career of the Maggid.

From his very first visit to the Baal Shem Tov in 1751 the Maggid was captivated by the master's mysticism and religious philosophy. He became his devoted disciple and eventually succeeded him in 1760 to the leadership of the fledgling group.

FOUNDERS OF new movements are frequently confined to historic obscurity. It is the disciples who create a subjective image of the leader through their creative interpretation of his spiritual legacy. In that sense it may be said that Hassidism as we know it today took shape with the election of the Maggid to leadership. He attracted 39 illustrious disciples who were to spread the message of Hassidism through most of eastern Europe. One of his disciples was Rabbi Shneur Zalman of Lyadi, the founder of the Lubavitch branch which is projecting the dynamism of the movement in America and in the other continents of the world.

The following quotations are illustrative of the Maggid's numerous sayings which were preserved by his disciples:

A trauma to the body produces a parallel trauma to the soul.

The Almighty is known by their honor among thieves."

name of "Menucha" (Rest). Since he is infinite he is of necessity also immobile. In a physical sense he is at rest.

In the eyes of the Almighty the past and the present are equal in dimension and substance.

RABBI ZUSYA came to spend three months with the Maggid in order to learn the proper behavior of the righteous. "All you need is three minutes," said the Maggid. "Our sages said: 'He is wise who learns from all people.' I want you to emulate three traits of infants and seven traits of thieves. An infant is not subject to fits of depression. He is never idle for a moment. He sheds tears when he craves something. A thief does not waste the hours of the night. He is never discouraged. He is prepared to give his life even for a pittance. He deflates the value of his acquired property. Even when he is punished his determination remains unshaken. He takes pride in his skill and would not engage in any other kind of work. There

RAV'S SEARCH FOR A WOMAN FOR A DAY AND RABBI KASS' INTERPRETATION

Editor, POST and OPINION:

Stand firm, don't retreat and don't apologize when certain watch dogs of Talmud and Torah bark imperially about their exclusive knowledge on Yiddishkeit, and about all the rabbinate. Your critic (P-O, Nov. 12) doesn't quote the Talmud precisely; he just interprets it; and you have every right to doubt his interpretation — that's scholarship and anything else is a kind of cringing idolatry. From the very vehemence of his response one must immediately feel that something is lacking. By their exclusiveness, their claims to superior knowledge is also suspect. Knowledge without wisdom and wisdom without kindness is an ugly distortion. One wonders about just plain "derech erez," (manners) and one wonders why this has so often been pressed out of The Jewish Press.

I am one of those "so-called rabbis" who knows a little Talmud, who tries to really understand it without any monopolistic claims or arrogance. What Rabbi Klass has done in his inimitable and discourteous manner is to select from various interpretations on a section of the Talmud. One interpretation he advocates like some fanatic patriot: "my interpretation right or wrong." The original references in the publication "Sh-mah" by Rabbi Arnold J. Wolf to Rav in Talmud Yoma 18b is quite correct in its implications about the truly amazing understanding of sexuality in the Talmud. (The mistake about Rabbi Tarfon is beside the point.) Rabbi Klass on the other hand, is not only off base with a one-sided interpretation, but really playing a different game — namely to denigrate all other rabbis and all other opinions. This we will not let him do, not only for the sake of rabbis but also for the sake of truth.

Rav, great scholar that he certainly was, used to go to a town, here named as "Darshish" and asked "mahn havay leyoma" (what woman will be with me for the day) and so too would Rabbi Nachman, son-in-law of Nasi. According to Rashi, Rav did this often and did it for as long as he stayed in town and then would give the lady a "gett" (divorce).

This activity of Rav is quoted in the context about travelling in general: that when one is sleeping alone in an inn one shouldn't use the innkeeper's blanket lest there be a discharge of male semen and this be seen as lustful; also, on such a trip, one shouldn't eat eggs lest this stimulate the male semen. The point is that the issuance of such male semen is not only wasteful (and also sinful as in the Biblical story of Onan) it is also seen as disgraceful; even more it is viewed as productive of "shaydim" (evil spirits) who use the semen to father other evil spirits. This concern with wasted semen is why we are told that on Yom Kippur night a high priest is expected to stay awake through the night to avoid any issuance of semen in his sleep which would pollute him and thus render him impure.

It is in this context that the behavior of Rav is discussed and the various views within the Talmud, and the interpretations of Rashi, and of the Tosafists there offered. The discussants are truly perplexed about this reported action of Rav who was known in another context as severe about sexuality. There Rav held "manghit alam demekadesh babeyah" (flogging for a man who marries a woman by intercourse.) Here it must be pointed out that Rav apparently did object to this form of marriage. After all, intercourse was one of the three acceptable forms of Jewish marriage in the Talmud: "kesef" (exchange), "shtar" (document), "beeyah" (intercourse). What was apparently objectionable to Rav was that each of these three ways of Jewish marriage had to be done in the presence of two witnesses, and intercourse in the presence of the two required witnesses would be "pitzus" (wantonness). Thus Rav's position was not against intercourse as such, but the public display of it.

The Gemara tries laboriously to understand Rav's action with a woman in a town away from home. At the conclusion of its discussion it asks "eebayas aynah" (what is to be learned here?) and answers that perhaps it is like "pas besalo" (bread in his pocket). The thinking here as explicated by Rashi is that it is like a person who has bread in his pocket and having it one need not yearn for bread. Thus, Rashi insists that this was only a "yichud" (sleeping together) but not necessarily having sexual intercourse; like the psychological effect of the bread: his having a woman with him would stifle his "yetzer harah" (sexual impulse) with its hungry demands.

Even at this point the discussion as amplified by Rashi shows clearly that sexuality is the issue. But wait! A further interpretation by "the Ari," a grandson of Rashi, challenged this explanation even of his grandfather and all but asserts that there must have been connubial intercourse even for the great Rav. He raises the question that if "yichud" (togetherness) is only to sleep, how could it possibly break the "yetzer harah" (which would still be there, and thus if it isn't used to satisfy the "yetzer" then how can it be compared to the having-bread-in-your-pocket (the "pas besalah")? The comments of "the Ari" implies the possibility of intercourse like the having of the bread implies the possibility of eating the bread.

The rabbis of the Talmud were not so much dismayed by Rav as they sought to understand his purposes, great man that he was. Perhaps they knew what a troubled life he led with an awful shrew of a wife: the one who was so bad that she went out of her way to frustrate him: when he asked for lentils she made him other beans, when he asked for beans she made him lentils — "auf tzulachas." Rav's son found it necessary to lie for his father's sake so when he knew that his father wanted lentils he would purposefully ask for beans; the suffering Rav had to ask his son not to lie even for his sake.

I don't think the rabbis and the commentators mentioned above doubted for a moment the sexuality inherent in the situation. Rabbi Wolf's point in citing this remarkable discussion is beautifully relevant. Sexuality was a necessity and it could not be denied, only capped and used meaningfully. What Rabbi Klass does to help him avoid the issue — and of course he is blinded by his own antagonism to "so-called rabbis" — is to pick a different commentator, in this case the great Gaon, and standing on the latter's shoulder he takes this one interpretation as the final word.

But this interpretation hardly solves the problem: this was not a Persian situation, it was a Babylonian; and to use a woman by way of pretense for protection may have saved Rav but hardly solves the lady's problem (I wonder if this interpretation is not just another variation of the Abraham and Isaac stories with their wives in Egypt.)

The rabbi you quote from The Jewish Press plays this game of selecting from dozens of commentators and then deciding which one is correct and clubbing anybody else's opinion. What "chutzpah"! Those who write commentaries are usually not so presumptuous; but some of those who follow commentaries written by others are often presumptuous. That they have been getting away with this is the real betrayal of Yiddishkeit and scholarship and piety.

So, dear editor, stand fast, there is no class monopoly of truth. There are many, many opinions along the way to the one God and His truths.

Attitude To Love

Dear Miss Goldberg,
I am sixteen and started dating this past summer. Recently

I met this real nice guy and my life was beginning to look beautiful. Then it all fell apart because our ideas on sex were different. He is 18. I want to wear white to my wedding, but the guys nowadays don't see any reason to.

While helping me with the above problem, please tell me some rules of dating in the area of kissing, making-out, and so on.

SHELLEY

New York.

Dear Shelley,

Making love is an individual thing. It would be misleading to try to give you definite rules that could apply all the time to anyone you dated. But we might start with a theory that every couple should feel no limitations in doing what they both separately and together feel comfortable with themselves in doing, short of course, of actual conception, unless they do both wish to conceive a child.

THE CATCH is, of course, the phrase "together feel comfortable with themselves." There are many reasons why a man or a woman may not feel comfortable in making love to each other beyond a certain point of physical intimacy or emotional tension. They feel, in other words, that they are "going too far." It is at this point, according to our theory, that the limitations do begin.

No individual should force another, or be forced, to do what he or she does not feel comfortable in doing. Love making is, after all, a mutual act. If you consider the reasons why you and your boyfriend had different ideas about sex, you may reach a better understanding of yourself, and, next time the situation arises, be able to establish your own "rules" for making out. For you will find that the rules differ according to who, what where, when, why, and sometimes how the situation arises.

THINK ABOUT this a little, and next week we'll try to discuss some of the factors that can cause a man and a woman to differ in the kind of physical sexual relationship they wish to have with each other.

Good And Bad Aspects Of Israeli Medicine

PHILADELPHIA — Israel has the lowest child death rate of any country in the world.

In-hospital care in the Jewish state is as good as hospital care in the United States, but treatment in clinics and doctors' offices is "appalling in its ineptness" bordering on "malpractice."

THESE WERE among the views of Dr. Albert Soffer who addressed a meeting of the American Physicians Fellowship of Israel here as reported in the Philadelphia Jewish Times.

The professor of medicine at the Chicago Medical School who spent six weeks in Israel visiting medical facilities said there had been no reported case of tuberculosis in Israel in the past two years.

Among his other comments was the conclusion that since most Israelis are members of medical programs they receive free care in hospitals and may be treated by the best surgeon in the country.

Other views he expressed were that:

The highest paid doctors in Israel, those who head departments in Israeli hospitals, receive $5,000 a year.

In one recent graduation class from Hadassah-Hebrew University Medical School, 30 per cent of the graduation class left Israel.

Medical care in the former Arab territories is on as high a plane as within Israel itself.

About 10 per cent of the Hadassah-Hebrew University Medical School openings are assigned to Arab students.

(Continued from page 22) there are really Israeli folk songs as yet is an academic question. The Israelis are singing — and the words and melodies are folk literature and one

And music! Music, good is caught up in the spirit of music, everywhere: Israeli folk this literature and can understand songs — and whether or not stand why the world's greatest poet-singer-king is of Israel. The Israel Philharmonic orchestra is one of the world's great symphony orchestras but unlike symphony orchestras here in the United States its concerts must be repeated several times to accommodate all who would hear them. One gets in Israel an impression of fine art all around one — fine art that is the common possession of everyone — the fine art that feeds the spirit and gives inner strength and perspective.

I VISITED A YESHIVA and heard the great and saintly Rabbi Kook talk — the son of the first chief Rabbi of the state of Israel. He spoke in Hebrew, of course, but through an interpreter we learned the meaning of Shalom in its deepest and richest connotations, issuing finally in another name for God.

Education in Israel reflects the universal concern of the Jew for learning and this concern has resulted in a system of higher education that can more than hold its own with any other system of higher education in the world. I believe that Israel and Japan are the only countries in the East with compulsory education and this fact becomes more incredible when one considers the staggering financial burden Israel bears for its defense. In Israel, elementary school education is free and compulsory and recently, on July 29, 1968, a new education bill was passed which added two years to the system. One of my most interesting experiences was actually being in the Knesset the day the bill was passed and feeling myself a part of history. On that same day the session was presided over by Mrs. Beba Edelson, deputy speaker of the House, and at one time she chided two members of the Knesset for talking to each other during the transaction of some business which she felt needed the undivided attention of those present and the two members so chided and who being called to order stopped talking were Mr. Levi Eshkol and Mr. Abba Eban.

ISRAEL IS ALL I have ever heard it to be — a small country, yes, but a country that is growing and building — ever looking with unquenchable hope to the future, a future that you and I must somehow help to insure. Israel still stands today a symbol of hope for millions of people — a land able and willing to provide not only sanctuary but also experience and expertise to emerging nations around the globe.

Israel means all this — but much, much more. Israel means the great cities — the sophisticated, busy city of Tel Aviv-Jaffa; Tel Aviv, the modern world's first all-Jewish city founded in 1909 as a suburb of Jaffa; Jaffa, an ancient port

(Continued from Preceding Pg.) Christians and sacred to me because of all its associations and meaning and because of all it represents to those I love. I prayed in the Hall of Remembrance — at Yad Vashem — and the knowledge of what it meant was almost shattering and there I vowed that insofar as one person could do anything, the holocaust would not happen again. And I prayed at the tombs of prophets and kings and in those places particularly sacred to Christians — all the holy places and shrines and churches and towns — safe now in Jewish hands. The meaning of Israel for a Roman Catholic nun? The great past represented by the great Wall; a future direction represented by a promise made at Yad Vashem — a promise made in the midst of the darkness and smoke and suffering of Auschwitz. The meaning of Israel for a Roman Catholic nun? She can talk of Israel and through the talking help dispel misunderstanding and ignorance . . . and she can pray . . . and love.

JERUSALEM IS UNIQUE. There is no other city like it — timeless and beautiful, a perfect synthesis of the ancient and the modern, a city holy to Judaism, Christianity, Islam; Jerusalem, the city of David and the capital of modern Israel; Jerusalem, the city of peace, yet it has seen more than its share of warfare; Jerusalem, an eternal city that has survived destruction and burning and has outlasted the civilizations that pillaged and ravaged her; Jerusalem, the city which the Lord did choose out of all the tribes of Israel there to put his name; Jerusalem, the golden; Jerusalem, once more the capital and cornerstone of Israel; Jerusalem, once more united in very good hands and hopefully soon again to be a city of peace.

Jerusalem is like no other city I have visited. It casts a spell — a spell compounded of the old and the new; of ancient history and plans for tomorrow; of ancient synagogues and large modern residential areas with commercial centers; the typical bargaining ritual in the old Jerusalem and the busy bustling super markets; ancient hand looms used by Bedouin women as they stand watching their men working with the newest Caterpillar tractors; the heavily shrouded Arab women and the mini-skirted sabras. The city casts a spell — the spell of all that Jerusalem has meant to the Jews and to the Christians — to the Christians who accept the Jewish Jesus as Messiah and whose New Testament is rabbinic!

BUT ISRAEL means more than this. Let me try to tell you in a very personal way. I prayed at the Western Wall, the Wall of Survival whose roots reach to the First Temple of Solomon, and I left my prayer written on a piece of paper tucked high into a crevice of the wall. As I touched and kissed the wall, I prayed for peace — and it was easy to pray at the wall — and that, not just because other people were praying devoutly and reverently — but it was easy to pray at the wall because the wall is a place sacred to the Jews and so too sacred to

Women's Lib At The Technion

HAIFA — Technology and the prime minister is a lady. women's liberation? It's no Currently, a growing number of issue at Technion, Israel's in- young Israeli women are joining ternationally known academic careers with raising technological university. a family.

To be sure, women's Yet, it's a remarkable trend, liberation isn't much of an issue when it takes place in what is anywhere in Israel, where considered the nearly exclusive women serve in the army and domain of males — the engineering school.

PERCHED ON THE forested slopes of Mt. Carmel near Haifa, in the northern part of Israel, Technion has accepted women as a matter of course — among its students, research personnel and, above all, on its faculty. Lack of opportunity and a feeling of inferiority toward men seems to concern these women not at all.

Take Dr. Nava Narkis, a shy, doe-eyed beauty, whose field of specialty happens to be sanitary engineering. She is doing research on breaking up oil emulsions contained in industrial wastewaters. A 34-year-old native Israeli, Dr. Narkis, a Technion Senior Lecturer, recalls with a smile a recent visit to the South Chicago Works of the United States Steel Corporation.

"They were expecting a man," she said. "They wouldn't let me in. Finally I was told I didn't have the right kind of shoes to go through the plant ..."

PROFESSOR RAHEL Shalom knew Technion when it wasn't yet a university with a campus of 45 buildings. She was graduated in 1931 — as a member of the third class in Technion history — and remained on the faculty. Today she is recognized as an expert in a field where women are virtually unheard of — reinforced concrete.

As head of the Technion's Building Research Station, Prof. Shalom has been a key figure in establishing standards and testing procedures for the construction industry in Israel. Her work is of importance because of Israel's phenomenal growth since it became a State. She was also vice-president of Technion and, on top of it all, she served as a major in the Israeli army during the War of Independence.

MRS. Yael Rom is on the administrative side — she coordinates a pre-academic course preparing soldiers from Israel's Sephardic (and usually disadvantaged) families for admission to Technion. It's a nine-month program in math, physics and English, at the end of which participants are ready to face the tough entrance examinations. The ratio of success is high — 90 per cent get in, and they are on their way toward engineering and science careers.

To judge by the number of married couples on the faculty, scientists seem to take to scientists. Dr. Ayala Cohen is a young lecturer in statistics (her specialty is time-series analysis) and the mother of two children. Her husband is a senior lecturer in the Physics Department. Dr. Gabriella Schmuckler, a chemist, is married to Dr. Gideon Schmuckler, the Technion's Director of Patents, and is the mother of two (Continued on Next Page)

Search Continues For Lost Children

Although 26 years have elapsed since the end of World War II, the tragedy of the thousands of Jewish children who had been saved from physical extermination by friendly Christian neighbors or who had been hidden away in monasteries and who were later baptized and brought up as Christians, is far from forgotten.

From time to time the "Association for the Return of the Victims of the Holocaust to the Bosom of Judaism," which is centered in Tel Aviv, receives letters from young men and women who suddenly become aware of their Jewish origin and seek to return to their people and to their homeland. They ask the Association's assistance in tracing possible kith and kin.

The following is a letter received recently from a young man in Poland:

"I have received a letter, but I don't know who the writer is, nor do I know to whom I must be grateful. I have the feeling that at long last someone is evincing an interest in my bitter lot. Here is my life story.

"On March 25, 1943 a Jewish couple arrived at the home of a peasant in the village of D. At midnight of the same day, the woman gave birth to a son. Two days later the peasant's wife gave birth to a daughter."

(Continued from Preceding Pg.) children. Her invention for the recovery of gold from metals dissolved in acid received international note recently and is of particular interest to the mining industry.

WHEN DR. BERTINA Fisher came to Israel from Rumania in 1951, she was a teen-ager — one of the thousands of immigrants who arrived in the country during the first few years of independence. But she knew where she was going — toward a career in science. She earned her three degrees, undergraduate, graduate and doctoral at Technion. Now she is teaching undergraduate students and does research in solid state physics. The 35-year-old Dr. Fisher is also the mother of three children.

A recent immigrant from the U.S. is Professor Shulamit Eckstein, an expert in quantum liquids theory.

Dalya Atlas, on the other hand, is engaged in music. She is the successful, spirited conductor of the Techion Orchestra, which provides a welcome leisure-time pursuit to this science and technology-minded community.

For these women, and others like them, women's liberation has little relevance. But then many issues which are so pressing elsewhere somehow lose their edge in Israel.

My foster father remarried and a week later and they never I began feeling what a stepmother means. The one who had died was a veritable angel. I shall never forget her.

When I was nine years of age I began being plagued by the question why people reject me and why everyone hates me. This situation continued until 1969. My foster father took ill and wrote a will. When I saw that he bequeathed nothing to me, I asked for the reason and he told me the true story, because he did not want to take the secret to his grave. He revealed to me who my parents were.

"I want to be a Jew. I am not ashamed of my people. I want to bear the name of my father and mother. I called twice at the Dutch Legation in Warsaw but they asked to produce a birth certificate. I am carrying out their instructions, and I shall do everything to set out for my ancestral homeland."

Shortly before the Six-Day-War a prominent Israeli citizen, who heads one of the Local Councils in the country, set out on a visit to Poland after learning that his only son had been saved from the Holocaust and has been brought up in the home of a Polish peasant without knowing anything about his true identity or origin.

Through a lawyer in Warsaw the young man was summoned from his village. His father, who was waiting for him in the lawyer's office, asked him bluntly: "Do you know you're a Jew and that you have a 'ather living in Israel? The young man paled. His father told him to remove his shirt, saying: "You have a scar on your left shoulder."

"Throughout these years I've had the feeling that the house in which I grew up was not my true home. At long last I have found a home," said the young man after father and son had embraced on finding each other.

The young man now lives with his family in Israel.

This is one of many stories in the files of the Association, which is headed by Rabbi Yedidya Frenkel of Tel Aviv. The Association has set itself the aim of tracing young Jews who in infancy were put under the care of Christian families and who do not know anything about their origins or about the ways and means of returning to their fold.

At the end of the war, Jewish institutions began exerting efforts to trace such children. The task was by no means easy because many foster parents had become attached to the children and refused to part from them, while Christian religious instructions, which had meantime baptized the children, refused to return them to Jewish care.

Today they are no longer children but grown-up men and women in their late twenties and thirties. Many learned of their Jewish origins when their foster parents revealed the secret to them shortly before dying. Some continue to live in their non-Jewish surroundings, and having set up families of their own, are consciously oblivious of their origin. Others find themselves bewildered and at a loss as to where to turn and how to build their future. It is such people that the Asso-

The Highest-Paid Woman

By GENE BAHARAV

JERUSALEM — The American dream of a penniless young immigrant reaching the top is not confined to America. Israel can count its share of these Horatio Alger stories and the story of Mirella Ben-Zimra is not the least of them.

Mirella, as she is popularly known, was an immigrant here 15 years ago without the "protectzia" of powerful friends and without even a knowledge of Hebrew. Within 10 short years, at the age of 38, she was filling a job usually reserved for men and today she is believed to be the highest paid woman in Israel. For the last five years she has been the director of the Israel branch of the Manufacturers' Life Insurance Company of Canada — possibly the only woman in the world in such a post. She points, with justifiable pride, to the fact that her agency, with insurance sales of more than IL 7 million ($2 million) a month, has set a record for the company's 131 branches around the world.

HER SALARY — reputedly the largest earned by any woman in Israel — is IL 7,000 monthly ($2,000) before taxes. (The average salary is under cipation endeavours to seek out.

Whenever such people are traced efforts are made to find some information about their families and their past. Subsequently endeavors are made to attract them to Jewish circles and to encourage a visit to Israel. In many instances these efforts have borne fruit, and the young people settle in Israel and build their life anew.

Some cases, however, have not yet reached a successful ending. There is the story of R.S. who was three months old when her mother, who carried her in her arms, was forced out of a bunker during the Warsaw Ghetto Revolt. The woman was shot immediately by an S.S. guard who, somehow captivated by the baby's smile, handed over the suckling for adoption to a childless Polish couple.

That baby is now 30 years of age. In the course of time she learned of her Jewish parentage and also of the fact that she had an aunt living in Tel Aviv. The latter invited her over to Israel but she hesitated for a long time. Meantime, her adopted father died and she would not leave the woman who had brought her up and had showered such great affection upon her. Lately all contact with her have ceased. It is believed that she has left Poland.

The Tel Aviv Association is active in many different directions in order to establish contacts with such young people. It publishes announcements in the press, institutes investigations, and often sends out material aid.

"Times have changed," Rabbi Frenkel said, in summing up the work of the Association. "Until a short time ago, it was we who were in search of these lost sons of the Jewish people; today it is they who try to establish contracts with us."

The Highest-Paid Woman

(Continued from Preceding Pg.) Manufacturers' Life. I answered it and I got the job — perhaps because I had graduated in economics and knew a number of languages — French, Italian and English.

"Here's something for you," he remarked.

IT WAS THE advertisement of a Canadian company —

Manufacturers' Life. I answered it and I got the job — perhaps because I had graduated in economics and knew a number of languages — French, Italian and English.

"I will always remember the day I started to work — it was May 24. I didn't know Hebrew and I didn't know any people here — so how was I to set about selling insurance?"

The way was difficult but not so difficult that a persistent, determined woman could not find it. One of Mirella's methods, as she tells it now, was to make the rounds of the hospitals to obtain the names and addresses of families with newborn babies. Then she would visit each home, congratulate the mother and marvel over the infant.

"OF COURSE, I was full of admiration, genuine admiration," she says, "Every baby has its own charm."

The advent of a baby was no time for social calls and Mirella made herself useful to the new mothers, even to the extent of helping out with an older child. Later, she visited the families as an old friend and frequently sold them the idea of life insurance.

"I really wanted to help," she says, "not only by helping the mother out with her chores, but in helping the whole family with its problems. My help was important to them because every family has problems. It was important to me because I had received so much help from others — many of them strangers — during the war years when we were in hiding in Italy. I felt that by helping others, I was repaying this debt I had in some small part."

"YOU KNOW THAT every time I sell a life insurance policy to the head of a family, I feel I am helping him. It's like giving a life preserver to a man on a ship at sea. Perhaps he won't need it, but it's there. And if he does need it, it's never really big enough. So, you see, I believe in what I'm doing and that's important."

Mrs. Ben-Zimra worked as a field agent of Manufacturers' Life for seven years, developing an ever-widening circle of friends and clients. Then an ulcer acted up and her doctors told her that she had to change her mode of living and seek more sedentary employment.

What appeared to be a disaster at the time turned out to be another step forward, she discovered. Her employers offered her the job of selecting and training salesmen. She proved to be exceptionally good at this and the team of 70

Kaddish For God

By RABBI M.M. KANTER

If you are a member of the over-forty generation, join with me in saying Kaddish for the God we all knew and loved.

God as an omnipotent, omniscient, supernatural being died some time ago. His passing was not announced in our newspapers, in books, or in the learned journals. Nevertheless,

His end has come. We should be aware of that momentous happening.

If you question the propriety of the change, remember that the grand evolutionary process of history is repeated in each of us. We're not the same persons today as we were yesterday, or, hopefully, will be tomorrow. Change is the cardinal rule in human experience: one idea supplements another and we grow.

FOR YOU AND me — for the Jewish people — history has shown how, within our generation, we have plumbed the depth of hell and witnessed the birth of a Jewish state.

The Highest

(Continued from Preceding Pg.) agents she directs today is composed of the men and women she hand-picked and trained.

"I SUPPOSE I have a flair for choosing the right people," she says now, "people that have the qualities we need — integrity, industry and the ability to cope with the most difficult of circumstances."

One way Mirella found the men she wanted was to go to the absorption centers where she often located men and women who had been in the insurance business abroad but were fearful of starting on their own in Israel. One of her most successful agents, she recalled, was a South African Oleh she met on a train. He had been a successful businessman in South Africa but, somehow, simply couldn't get started in Israel.

Like many Israeli women, Mrs. Ben-Zimra combines an active career with home-making and caring for a family. In this case, the family includes her husband who is an economic advisor, daughter Margalit, aged 12, a dog and 10 kittens.

"I WOULDN'T SAY it's an easy job for a woman," Mirella says of her work. "There are no fixed hours in a job like this. One has to be free at all times for the job. Under the circumstances, it's not easy to run a home well, but then I suppose it is no easier in other parts of the world where one cannot rely on steady domestic help. I am fortunate in having a husband who gives me such whole-hearted support. He has always encouraged and helped me. I wouldn't say that he doesn't complain when I get home late."

Margalit, her 12-year-old, she says, understands the situation and doesn't resent the fact that her mother must devote so much time to business affairs.

"We are," Mirella says, "a close-knit family and we live a close family life. We are always together on Shabat and no matter what the schedule, I manage to be with Margalit each night at her bedtime. That hour is sacred for both of us."

Kaddish For God

(Continued from Preceding Pg.) was strangled to death in a concentration camp. For others He was resurrected in May, 1948. It has taken almost 25 years for the significance of these events to emerge, so we can re-evaluate the meaning and purpose of our survival.

The Bible stories we remember from our childhood pictured God in human terms.

For some of us God was father's authority and mother's warmth. Surely these have been replaced by more mature, subtle and varied images.

IN LIFE WE constantly evaluate and re-evaluate our social, economical, political and physical status. Surely we are justified in doing the same with our theology.

For me, the new boundaries of a Jewish spiritual world — gas ovens and the possession of the Temple wall — exclude from consideration the concept of God as an omnipotent, omniscient, supernatural being.

These events, occurring as they have in one lifetime, affirm for me Mordecai Kaplan's insight that God is neither to be blamed for Auschwitz nor praised for recent Israeli military victories.

NO LOGIC CAN account for God's omnipotence or hiddenness in one event, and His power and graciousness in another without provoking me to abhor such a God. We can in our day no longer speak of God in traditional supernatural terms. Mordecai Kaplan is correct when he warns us that we must talk about God as a functional quality rather than as a "Being" as we do in the Bible and in our prayer services, or as an "Entity" as we do in philosophical speculations.

We have to identify as Godhood all the relationships, tendencies and agencies which in their totality go to make life worthwhile in the deepest and most abiding sense. This Godhood can have no meaning divorced from the human ideals of truth, goodness, and beauty interwoven in a pattern of holiness.

DIVINE QUALITIES within human creatures manifest themselves in the experience of dignity and holiness.

Violence and evil are the consequences of our misuse of human creativity; the result of abdication of social responsibility, the product of injustice. They are the effluence of insensitivity to the divine quality possible in all human relationships.

But their very magnitude and pervasiveness should convince us that we must make our salvation in this world.

This new Godhood, as I see it, is built upon three postulates which enable man to find dignity, confidence, and courage. Without these, the struggle for social progress cannot be maintained. The promise of human life must be abandoned to defeat.

FIRST OF ALL, you and I must believe that there is a controlling and beneficent purpose unfolding in the universe. It is the conviction of purpose which alone can bridge for man the gulf between his isolated and homeless self and the apparently alien and indifferent world about him. Man will feel at home in the cosmos only if he believes that it is his Father's house. This house may be divine as in the Psalmist's chant, "Lord, Thou hast been our dwelling place . . ."

Or purpose may be discerned as Einstein's concept of an orderly universe.

Or purpose may be the "evolutionary appetite" of Bernard Shaw, who wrote, "there are forces at work which use individuals for purposes far transcending the purpose of keeping these individuals alive and prosperous and respectable and safe and happy in the middle station in life, which is all any good bourgeoisie can reasonably require, as is established by the fact that men will, in the pursuit of knowledge (Continued on Next Page)

and of social readjustments for which they will not be a penny the better, and are indeed often many pence the worse, face poverty, infamy, exile, imprisonment, dreadful hardship and death."

BELIEF IN THE significance of the individual is the second postulate of our atomic post-modern Godhood.

In one of his published Unpopular Essays Bertrand Russell wrote: "The importance of man, which is the one indispensable dogma of the theologians, receives no support from a scientific view of the future of the solar system."

One is prompted to reply, so much the worse for the so-called scientific view, which doubtless will go through many revisions and corrections in the future, as it has in the past. Time and again science has been tardy in arriving at conclusions which the intuitive religious genius of man formulated long before.

BUT LORD RUSSELL is entirely correct when he states that, "the importance of man is the one indispensable dogma of theologians." It is also the one indispensable dogma of democracy. And it is at the heart of the terrible crisis which is tearing our world apart today.

To the religions of the Western world, man has immense significance in the scheme of things. Man fulfills the purpose of Godhood — each man, every man, rich or poor, wise or simple, saint or sinner.

Do you know what sin is? SIN IS VOLUNTARY abandonment of status. It is self-degradation, descent into unworthiness and the lower life from which man has emerged. Religion challenges man to live and act always with the knowledge that his life is tremendously significant and endlessly ascendant.

Religion demands much of us in terms of duty and sacrifice, but it also gives much to us in terms of independent status, dignity and inherent rights. Every man has the right to say, with an ancient teacher of Israel, "for my sake was the whole world created."

Moral aspiration is impossible in man as long as he regards himself as of little account. No moral aspiration ever springs from the soil of belittlement and lack of self-esteem.

THE PSALMIST intones: "thou made him little less than God, and hast crowned him with glory and honor. Thou hast given him dominion over the works of Thy hands; Thou hast put all things under his feet."

Our hard won victories against corporate authority are never permanently secure. The ideology which espouses massive and ruthless slaughter is not dead. The systems still (Continued on Next Page)

endure. Dictators and despots rule much of the globe.

Men are being handled in many parts of the world and in many departments of life impersonally and in the mass. Today's biographer is the actuary and the computer. Increasingly, we are becoming statistics. Even the names of our cities are not as important as their zip codes. We are shuttled about like herds of cattle; coordinated and subjugated to the state until the last vestiges of our individuality, freedom and rights vanish.

THE FAITH THAT will serve us best, in this post-modern era, is faith in the worth and significance of the individual, in his inalienable rights.

Without such faith the dogma, "we hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal and that they are endowed by their creator with certain inalienable rights" cannot endure. Man's stature will be progressively reduced, the free domains of his mind and spirit will speedily come under tight control and man's dignity will be dragged into the dust.

But, with such faith, we will be strong enough to accept all the social controls necessary to preserve our free society, and the ethical and moral controls, inherent in Judaism, necessary to preserve our religion.

GODHOOD DEFINES a method by which men might attain morally desirable ends; a method itself worthy of such ends. This is the third postulate in the faith that will serve us best. It outlaws, once and for all, the notion that moral ends justify immoral means.

Each single step on the way toward the realization of a worthy objective must, as far as humanly possible, be a worthy objective in itself.

To establish justice, freedom and peace, men must employ the ways of justice, freedom and peace.

The more exalted human goals are, the less likelihood there is of their early or complete attainment. Accordingly, (Continued on Next Page)

Kaddish For God

(Continued from Preceding Pg.) when ruthless, brutal, impatient, and desperate measures are employed they not only make the attainment of these goals impossible, they also turn man's long journey toward them to one of misery and horror.

GODHOOD HAS NEVER been fully attained in the world. Man has not yet learned to live with other men, or the products of his inventive mind, or even with himself. How could such a creature fully accept a quote, supernatural, unquote, God?

In our age when man's power is vastly augmented, (including the power of self-destruction and, thus, the power to end history), religion is being ignored more thoroughly than at any time in human history. State and class autocracies have proceeded on the theory that there is no law superior to theirs. Brutal methods are constantly justified by their results.

The shame of our age is that we are committing the most shameless acts of immorality in the name of high morality. Methods, which are abhorred and denounced in one's opponents and neighbors, are rationalized and justified as moral imperatives when employed by oneself. We talk of justice and brotherhood, of a classless human society and universal peace, but we act as if these ideals were demons out of hell, lashing them onto the most horrible acts of injustice, hatred, and violence.

THIS BEING THE case, it is part of patriotism, of enlightened self-interest, and of altruism to seek ways of living together in peace in spite of conflicting ideologies.

There is no solution other than universal destruction.

We cannot wait for things to get better. We must begin to make them better. We must revise the mood and thought pattern of our age. We must more. Yet we need not be sad recharge our world culture with or distressed, for Godhood is a new devotion to the sanctity alive and well, to direct us to of methods in human progress. those human resources that The God of our youth is no actualize the divinity within us.

Chanukah Vs Xmas

By RABBI RAYMOND ZUERIN of bells and the flashing of Yo-ho-ho, the season to be lights brings a sense of gaiety jolly has fa-la-la-la come to an end at last. I truly love There is, however, one thing December. Somehow, the entire about December that does city seems to change. People bother me — the inequity of smile a bit more than usual competition. (than normal?), while the jingle My daughter's kindergarten class is but a pale reflection of the greater society at large. Her teacher, after spending the better part of the month in defining, discussing, demonstrating and delicately delighting in the entire story of Christmas, decided one day in the third week of Advent to invite a Jewish five-year-old to "tell the story of Chanukah."

NOW WHEN IT comes to statesmanship my daughter can truly hold her own among the talkers of the post Romper Room set. And so it was that she told the story of brave Judah fighting off the "bad King Antiochus" replete with eight days of oil, dreidels and latkes.

Certainly, the Chanukah story is every bit as exciting as the Christmas story. Yet, the vision of a 40 year old teacher spending 25 hours on the one, as opposed to a five-year-old student spending five minutes on the other seems rather one-sided.

But the real inequity comes at program time. Now how can "I Had a Little Dreidel" stand up to "Silent Night?" By what measure of hutzpa can one equate "Ma Oz Tzur" in musical quality to "Noel," "O Little Town of Bethlehem" and "Drummer Boy?"

Therefore, I propose that we set out to balance the inequities. I propose a crash program to create music for Chanukah which will not only get us equal time on Muzak and in school assemblies, but will also restore a sense of proportion to our souls.

WITH TALENT abundant (Bacharach, Bernstein, Gershwin, Kahn, Lerner, Simon, et al) it would seem to me that we could flood the market by year's end with such competitive discs as, "O Little Town of Modin," "Raindrops Keep Fallin in the Negev," and "My Name is Maccabee and I'm the Leader of the Band."

The following lyrics, for example, fairly beg to be sung: "Anti - o - chus, he would choke us if he could have gotten near; but brave Judah never would-a let the people fall in fear . . . hey, hey, hey, hey" . . . etc.

Couple this Renaissance of music with a new poem entitled: "Twas the Week Before Yontif," and I think that it won't be long before my daughter's teacher will be demanding equal time for Christmas . . . or at least eight days of presents.

Adventure In Antiquities

By GORDON COHN

Our little adventure in the antiquities game began one June night in 1969 when I stood admiring the beautiful pottery and glass collection of Dr. Nelson Glueck. The living room of his Cincinnati home was filled with pieces which the eminent archaeologist and college president had accumulated during a lifetime of work and study in the Middle East.

I asked if it were possible for someone traveling in Israel on a modest budget to acquire something ancient and beautiful. Dr. Glueck said yes; he recommended a visit to Kando's shop in East Jerusalem.

TWO YEARS LATER we remembered that recommendation and went looking for Kando. Finding him wasn't easy. The phone book's Golden Pages listed no such dealer. The incomparable information operators assured us there was no person in the city by that name. Even the Arabs in our hotel said they had never heard of him.

On our fourth day in East Jerusalem we entered a souvenir shop off Salah Eddin Street and asked the owner if he knew Kando.

"Of course," he said. "Why do you want him?"

"I want to buy some antiquities."

"My prices are better."

"Can you give me his address?"

"I would be happy to take you there personally," he said.

"Oh, that won't be necessary. If you'll just give me the address . . ."

"It would be my great pleasure to escort you," he said, with a smile that flashed Finder's Fee. I left.

DOWN THE STREET I found an Israeli army installation. In the courtyard two black-skinned soldiers in rumpled fatigues with Uzzis in their laps were smoking and laughing with each other.

No, they had never heard of Kando, but in the cinema across the street there were men playing cards who knew everyone in East Jerusalem.

I interrupted the backroom cardgame.

"Kando? Everyone knows Kando." A sweating fat man with an inch of cigarette ash rose and pointed to the St. George Hotel, directly across from the souvenir shop I had just left. "Around that corner is Kando."

We entered a shop filled with silver, olive wood, mother of pearl, mosaics of prophets and saints, rings and bracelets, chess sets and candlesticks.

TWO MEN WERE talking at the counter. One wore a suit and tie, the other a fez and lightweight robe that hung to his slippers.

"I Kando," said the man in the fez, smiling around a mouthful of irregular, tobacco-stained teeth.

I mentioned that Dr. Nelson Glueck had suggested him, and the faces of both men fell.

"I am Kando's son," the other said, "Dr. Glueck (he pronounced it Glook) was known to all our family. We had great respect for him and were sorry to learn of his death. He was a fine man and came here often."

"We have come to look at antiquities," I said. The son said something in Arabic and thing we liked. Matt chose a small room on the second floor. The walls were covered with clay vessels and figures of every description. Kando sat down at a battered desk and took from its center drawer two cigar boxes filled with coins. Some looked freshly minted. He held a few for us to admire.

"VERY NICE," he said. "Nero. Vespasian. Caesar. Each twenty-eight dollar."

Then he turned and from a set of metal drawers behind him removed a couple of pieces of finely colored glass, obviously very old and wrapped in cotton. "These nice pieces. Very nice." They were.

Several times we found something and held it up for a price, but Kando mumbled in Arabic to his son, who told us the piece was no good. Other things were too expensive.

Finally, each of us had something we liked. Matt chose a small Grecian head, Lois found an interesting animal head fragment of a vessel Kando said was 3,000 years old, and I chose a pitcher identified as Roman, 1st century A.D.

We paid "special price Kando makes only for friends of Dr. Glook," and left happy, our treasures in a flight bag over my shoulder.

A HALF BLOCK away I said, "What if it's all phony?"

"What do you mean?" Lois said.

"I mean, Glueck is dead. That man has no obligation to us. He could have sold us a bag of dreck."

We walked on quietly. After awhile we passed the Albright School of Archaeological Research.

"Hey!"

"What's the matter?"

In a garden at the rear we found archaeologists from all over the world taking tea. They were in for the weekend from their separate digs and comparing notes. I asked if someone might be able to authenticate our purchases and was directed to Dr. Bull of Drew College, Madison, New Jersey, director of the Institute.

THE PORTLY PROFESSOR graciously took us into a shed at the rear of the property where shards of pottery were being glued together and inventoried.

"In four eight-foot squares this summer we've found 2,200 Roman coins, and a lot of other interesting things. I'll spend my life digging here and just barely scratch the surface of Caesarea," Bull said, examining each of our pieces.

"I can only guess at the age of the other two, but this I know," he said, holding my pitcher. "Roman's my period. It's imitation terra sigillata."

"Imitation?"
 "Oh, don't worry," he laughed. "I don't mean fake, the Romans made the finest pottery in the world near Rome and shipped it throughout the empire. Some guy around here thought he could duplicate it and sell it for less. It's first century, all right and a beautiful piece. I'd like to have it in my own collection. Take your other things to the Israel Museum. Someone there should be able to tell you what you've got."

THE NEXT DAY we went down to the basement of the Israel Museum and met Ruth Amiran, who has spent "more years than I want to confess" as archaeologist in the Israeli landscape.

(Mrs. Amiran's name meant nothing to us that morning. Later we were told she has an influential reputation, and on September 2 we read in the Long Beach Independent that she was part of the team that uncovered a 4,500-year-old city near Arad, 10 miles west of the Dead Sea.)

Mrs. Amiran scrutinized Lois's animal head fragment and then called over two other archaeologists. They talked excitedly in Hebrew and passed the piece from hand to hand.

"Where did you get this?" Mrs. Amiran asked.

"From Kando. Do you know him?"

"Of course. Everyone knows Kando . . . There's no doubt this is authentic. Late Bronze, early Iron Age. Between 800 and 1,000 B.C. We would like to keep it and give you something of the same period in return."

"Why's that?"

"None of us have ever seen anything like it. Animal heads are common to the period, but we've never seen one with a human hand on its neck. We'd like to keep it for further study. You know, it's within our rights to demand that it remain in Israel."

I felt very sorry that I had come for help.

The two other archaeologists looked to me and began talking with Mrs. Amiran in Hebrew. She said, "My Colleagues say that they can see by your face that you wish to keep it."

"Yes, is that terrible?"

Xmas In School Is Minor Issue

By RABBI JACOB FRIEDMAN

As dignified human beings endowed with God-given rights, we ought never allow ourselves as individuals or as a people to be degraded into second class citizens. Our rights and feelings as a minority are as valid as those of the majority.

I realize that there is a difficulty when it comes to Christmas celebrations in our public facilities, and I do not stress demanding the removal of non-depth religious decorations, although, I would hope that one day these practices might take into consideration the feelings of non-Christians. I will raise my voice, however, when I see non-Christians made to participate in Christmas observances or when strictly religious items, such as Nativity scenes or plays are employed.

I AM ALSO against Chanukah being introduced to the schools because Chanukah is basically a religious festival, and if the Christian wishes to regard Christmas as a secular observance, rather than a religious holy day, that is his desecration and problem.

However, there are certain areas where I feel that we, as Jews, ought to raise our voices, but unfortunately have been most neglectful. Last year, I wrote a column concerning the High School proms which are held on Friday night. Now this is an area where I feel we should seek to make changes so that no one observing a Friday night Shabbat would be left out or inconvenienced. The prom is not a religious event, but is open to all students. If those who would fight to remove the Christmas observances from the school, would instead seek to do something positive, then let them use efforts in having the prom changed to a Saturday night.

FURTHER, IF THOSE who would protest religious type celebrations in school are really concerned about their own Jewish awareness, then let them observe the Jewish holidays by staying away from school and attending synagogue. It is my belief that those who violate the Jewish spirit, do more harm to Jews and Judaism than all the Christmas trees put together.

I would much rather see our Jewish people demand of the school a change in schedule of athletic events from Shabbat to another time. I would much rather see those who worship the god "football" on a Yom Kippur morning come and worship "God" Himself. I fear these violators more than I fear the Christmas and Easter public celebrations. For the latter can be fought in our homes, synagogues and religious schools. The former situations are the hidden enemies of Judaism.

Town Crier

By G.M. COHEN

Nothing that we've suggested here in years has aroused so much interest as the idea of a Jewish historical society.

One of the leading Jewish women's organizations is interested in proceeding, as is one of the city's top educators (public schools), while another is a top official of a leading insurance company.

We're sure that the congregations will welcome such a society, since their files must be cluttered with minutes going back for years which they do not wish to discard, and which are just taking up space.

The same must be true for many of the older families who have valuable mementoes that belong in the treasures that a Jewish historical society would amass.

Of course, the idea stemmed from the thousands, yes thousands, of negatives which the late Zalman Cohen had collected. He himself may have had in the back of his mind the thought that someday they might be valuable, for they not only are they identified clearly, but filed away in perfect order.

What is the next step?

We suppose we should call a meeting and begin to organize. For the time being, we'd suggest that anyone interested contact us, so we can add their names to those who already have responded.

Any suggestions for proceeding would be welcome. Anyone who cares to write letters to The P-O giving their views will help to stimulate more interest. Let us hear from you.

Teen Scene

TEEN SCENE BY the YME STAFF

Ah, "... news, the manna of the day," as Matthew Green so aptly put it. Since there won't be any of that junk in this column, let's get down to hard-core gossip. So, readers, here's the way the world looks on Friday, Dec. 10, 1971.

First, let's take a critical look at the DeBette formal, held last Saturday night at the Atkinson Hotel. Oh, readers, what mad folly plays in the hearts of young lovers (and everyone else who showed that night?) Those luscious maidens (stop breathing so hard, guys) donning those expensive gowns (if you're going to dribble, leave the room, you're ruining the keys) which they purchased with their hard-earned baby-sitting money, and those swave (you mean "suave" don't you? that's what I thought) young gentlemen spending last week's poker money on their formal Top Hat (Continued on Next Page) attire. On cruel fates, did they not know that when the clock struck twelve, the credit unions would turn them back into pumpkins? (Heavens to Cinderella). Among the social aristocracy in attendance for this momentous occasion were Shelle Horwitz, escorted by the gentleman's gentleman Mel Mordoh (I don't get it), cunning David Weinstein who appeared with Carol Cantor (I didn't know DW was in Debettes), Karen Valencia allegedly with the debonaire Frenchman from the Northside Brent Shapiro, ("more," the crowd cries, "more"). What a colossal evening! Sue Solotkin and Jim Steadman, Carolyn Calderon and Rich Bernstein, Laurie Dreisenson and Stan Feldman (didn't he play that lawyer on Ironside?)

Of course, there were those who preferred spilling mozzarella (where does she live?) on their blue jeans instead of or-dourvees (see how cultured we is?) on their tuxes. For this very reason, if not others, Elyse Bernstein, in conjunction with the, uh, Cosa Nostra (we would say "Mafia" but we'd rather not get our houses bombed, senior-by the way, I don't think it was really with the, Italians please forgive us, Mafia), threw a pizza (that must have made some mess) party that very same Saturday night. But not just an everyday run-of-the-mill pizza party, a pizza party with soft-drinks, too.

FJYO bored members! There will be a board meeting (Oak will be a special guest) Dec. 8 at the Jewish Center. That's right, you're two days late. But don't worry, it's probably still going on (just kidding, Marcus Farraccini).

Visiting Indianapolis in the last few weeks has been that messenger of sad tidings, Mona Nucleosis. The staff finds it amazing how this little devil has become a raging fashion among the youth. Oh readers, shame on you! Well, as they say, we present the facts, you draw the conclusions.

Just to remind all you gamblers, Swank held a Casino Dance, December 3. That organization of social elitence received a good crowd for this most festive of occasions, huh, Steve Weinstein, Pres.

This Sunday night Baruch Hashem NCSY will be putting on a rickel & Esther Broniki written skit entitled "DATING INSTRUCTIONS: A YOUTH'S VIEWPOINT." Performing before the crowd at the B'nai Torah Sisterhood Hanukah Dinner will be Marvin Goldstein, Frances Redlich, Lisa Goldstein, Sandra Zeckel; Alan Cohen, Gary Sakovitz, Matt Klein, Mona Frankovitz, Esther Broniki, and Rickel. They are receiving special technical assistance from Noel and Mitch Rolsky (little brothers of Neil Rolsky who helped on the North Central production of HELL-O DOLLY).

Ken Newman and Debbie Krugman are named scholars of the week. It seems that both of these represented the Jewish Faith in the Big Ten in Mr. Moore's Physics classes at North Central.

Louis Starr is Mr. Intelligence of the week. He showed his prowess in this department by, on Dec. 1, locking himself and all others out of his car in the North Central Parking lot. Yeh, Louie!

SPORTS: this week focusing on the AZA B-ball team. Rickel and Don Fogle are player coaching this year for the running attack which they have freshly installed. Lacking experience, with only Phil Redlich being a returning starter, they are counting on Jeff Stinkeller to help them off those boards. Ben Friedman (rookie), Bob Foster (rookie), and Moe Nahmias (2nd year man) round out the speedy first string. Vet. Harold Rhodes heads the reserve men, being followed by 2nd year men Moe Meshulam and Mark Koplow and rookies Mark Goldstein, Gary Loft, and Tim Kwitney.

Gary Goodman is hereby named TEEN OF THE WEEK for his valiant efforts on the faltering North Central Wrestling Team. Gary took the 105 wt. class in a losing effort against Warren Central recently. This is Gary's first year on the North Central Varsity Wrestling Team and his first year at North Central. Not Bad.

Andy Bursky is Famous Person of the Week. His name appeared once in the Indianapolis Teen Star. Whoopee.

Days to mark on the calendar: today — Human Rights Day, December 13 — First day of Hanukah, and December 15 — Bill of Rights Day. Yay for the calendar (pass the January, please).

VEGETARIAN OF THE MONTH — Alan Nemes. His story: One vegetarian walks up to another and says, "Hi!" The other replies, "Hi! Are you a vegetarian?" The first man answers, "Yes, I am." The other says, "Funny, you don't sound like a vegetarian." (It broke us up, too.)

Before closing, we, the Staff of YME (Youth's Mightiest Efforts Wireservice) would like to wish everyone a happy Hanukah and would like everyone to, when you say a prayer over the Hanukah Menorah this Sunday, say a prayer for those Jews in Russia who don't have a Menorah to say a prayer over.

Symphony Seminar Features Violinist

Aaron Rosand, eminent violin virtuoso, will be featured at the next meeting of the Symphony Seminar Series on Wednesday, Dec. 15, at 8 p.m., at the Jewish Community Center, 6701 Hoover Road.

Described by a number of the foremost music critics as the modern-day Paganini, Rosand has won world-wide acclaim for his tremendous pyrotechnical skill and the beauty of his tone. His busy schedule calls for appearances on three continents, and his achievements have won him decorations from the governments of France and Belgium. He will be the guest soloist with the Indianapolis

Symphony Orchestra in the following pair of concerts.

Rosand has promised to bring his violin, the magnificent Guarnierius del Gesu of 1741, to the Seminar session. He is no stranger to Indianapolis, having thrilled audiences several times in his appearances in Butler's Romantic Music Festival.

Joining in dialogue with Rosand will be Frank Cooper, the founder and guiding genius of the Romantic Festival. A member of the piano faculty of Butler University, he is a recognized authority on the music of the Romantic Period. Several times he has been invited to London by the British Broadcasting Company to give lectures on this subject. A pianist of note, he was recently appointed music curator of the Indianapolis Art Museum.
